Preface

The following is what I learned from the wills, the presentments of chapter court and other courts, and my studies as I transcribed the wills from the 1600s.

In the 1970s, the Wills were microfilmed and then put onto a film that could be rented for review. For these Archdeacon Wills, I reviewed the films rented from the Family History Center of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latterday Saints, film numbers 106195 through 106207 for the Archdeacon Wills, and 991433 through 991448 plus 991530 plus 991638 through 991648 for the Episcopal Wills. The same films are available at the Manx Museum on the Isle of Man, though with different call numbers. Also, Robert on his Manx Manorial Records posted wills from the 1500s and early 1600s that he photographed at the Manx Museum; the two record folders of three not microfilmed were apparently deemed too fragile to microfilm in the 1970s and so were not filmed then. On the films, the years were not always sequential, but in creating these books, I rearranged them so that they are in sequential order. For each book, I created an Index. The Index at the end of a given book is a partial index, of children, siblings, and some who received legacies (even though relationship was not recorded), and some others who were mentioned in the will. Supervisors of underage children were usually aunts and uncles of the children, these are included in the Index. I have also transcribed presentments and other court actions as well as various notes and letters included on the microfilms. Some of these contain important information about people, which has been included in the Index. I also indexed people from presentments and other court documents included with the wills. While I have tried to index everyone, so that everyone is indexed at least once (even business partners from England or Ireland, or witnesses to letters written by a parish priest from Ireland or England, etc.), I am sure I missed people here and there. So if you are seeking a particular person, scanning the full will, as well as the other written information, might reveal him or her.

To the best of my ability, the enclosed Wills are a 'transcription', rather than a 'translation'. That is, I have tried to record the exact spellings, and have for the most part, started and ended lines as they are written in the original text. Hopefully, my work will be useful for the next person who comes along and does a modern 'translation', which would make the wills easier to both read and search.

You will notice a line under occasional letters, e.g., pcell ('parcel'). 'p' indicates par, pre, por, etc. Sometimes the underlining indicates that those letters were written as superscripts in the original, which was often a way of indicating an abbreviation of the word, e.g., exec^r is short for 'executor'. Another abbreviation is 'y' for 'th', so 'yt' = that, 'yr' = their, 'ye' = the, fay^r = fath^r, etc. Other frequent abbreviations: or = our, wt = what, wch = which, wth = with, sd = said. 'dj' and 'dim' are abbreviations for the Latin word for 'half'. 'I' was often used in place of 'j', especially in the first half of the 1600s and before. So 'enjoy' = enjoy, 'ioynt' = joint, 'iurati' = jurati, etc. An 'm' with a bar across the top is an abbreviation for a double 'mm'; sometimes a word with a single 'm', such as William, is written without the 'm', but with a bar across the word indicating the 'm', so that, for example, 'Will' with the tail of the last 'l' being brought up to make a bar through or above is transcribed as 'Willm'. The same is true of 'n'.

Sometimes, 'T' looks like our 'F'; this can be confusing such as with the surname 'Teare', often written 'Teere', especially since there is also a family 'Freere', where the first 'r' can look like anything. However, through most of the 1600s, the first 'F' of a name was written as a double 'ff'. So Freere is generally written ffreere, not Freere during these years. Sometimes, 's' and 'f' are difficult to differentiate, and I am sure I have transcribed them incorrectly, sometimes substituting 'f' when it should have been 's', and vice versa. Some clerks make 't' and 'b' difficult to decide between. Transition from old style writing to new is often mixed in a single document in the last half of the 1600s, so that, for example, an old-style 'r' can be confusing and look like a different letter (or couple of letters) when a new-style 'r' is also being used in the will.

Another comment about the surname 'Freer'. Sometimes, the scribe records it as 'Fryer'. See ArW 1659A #33 Jurby will of John Callow, adolescent, where aunts to the testator, Isabel Freer & Joney Freer, are also recorded as Isabel Fryer and Joney Fryer. There are a few other scattered examples. So when you see 'Fryer', check out 'Freer'.

Transposing letters is also seen in the will of Marian Scarff, the wife of Michael Kerry / Kyrie. In EpW 1606E #032, Michael's surname is recorded as 'Kyrie', but in a will copy EpW 1606E #066, his surname is recorded as 'Kerry'.

Note that numbers frequently were recorded using Roman numerals, so that 'xs' is '10s' (or 10 shillings), not some unknown digit or letter before the 's'. Where I have come across 'xs', I have usually designated its modern form in brackets [10s]. For the most part, with other numerals, I have not; thus xviijs is left standing (it is 18s), etc. When Roman numerals are used, an 'i' means '1', and a row of i's is ended by a 'j' (so 'iiij' is '4'). Where there has been a lone 'j' (meaning '1'), I have typed 'I'. Note that the i and the j were used interchangeably in the 1600s. Also, a capital I and a capital J often looked the same, which has puzzled my head more than once; hopefully I transcribed those instances correctly.

Where I cannot make out a word, or letters in a word, or where part of the word is hidden or torn off, I have indicated the same by using a dashed line, e.g., ----, or sometimes xxxx. I have also frequently indicated why there is a dashed line (e.g., '[fold]----lie' means that the left side of the line / word is hidden in a fold, generally caused by the binding of the page into a book). Once in a while, when a line has been crossed out so that the '----' could not be seen, I have used 'xxxx', that is: ~~xxxx~~.

It seems that sometimes the Manx were economical with their words. Thus, for 'the one', they said / wrote 'thone', 'the other' is 'thother', and 'the almightie' is 'thalmightie', Le Ayre or the Ayre becomes 'Thayre' (that is Lezayre), etc. If you come across a strange word, saying it out loud might help you figure out what the word is.

I have used a line across the page to indicate a new page in the original, rather than trying to paginate as the wills and presentments were done. However, when a will crossed several pages, I did not put a line across the page to delineate this, but rather included all the will between the dividing lines as if it were recorded on one page. I did this for easier review of a will.

You will notice at the top of the wills I have included a 'summary', listing people, especially relatives, from the will. You will notice that some wills contain notes referring to wills of a spouse or parent or child. Sometimes, when reviewing the Index, I could see a connection between wills. Sometimes, the connection was glaringly simple to make. Other times, it took hours of study to 'prove' a suspected connection. But there are many other connections to be made. That is why I have created a Master Index, that is, an Index that combines the indices of all the Wills from the 1600s.

After I typed a will, I created the Index to it. Sometimes the Index reference is simple, sometimes it is more involved. Hopefully it will make your research easier and not muddle it.

I cross referenced my Index with the Archdeacon Index typed by someone in the late 1800s / early 1900s, and the Episcopal Index created later. Sometimes I came across a will not listed in the original Index. Sometimes a will was listed in the old Typed Archdeacon Index that was not on the microfilm copy: perhaps it was accidentally skipped when filmed, or it has been completely lost, or (hopefully), it was removed from its original place, and then misfiled in another year book. There are also a very few times when a will was listed under an erroneous name in the older index, partly because of the difficulty in reading the poor penmanship. By studying the full will, the actual name became apparent. Where any of these problems have occurred, I have indicated it.

Comments about the Archdeacon Wills

The old Typed Index for the Archdeacon Wills starts with four wills from 1631. However, the microfilm of the wills contained ninety-three wills from 1628, none from 1629, eighty-six from 1630, and 104 from 1631. Before 1628, there are no wills except one from 1623 of Phinlo Casement, another from 1623 found amongst the 1637 wills (Catharine Corteen), a 1625 will (Dorothy Warberton alias Harrison) probated in 1633, and a 1615 will (of Mary or Marriad or Mally xxxx alias Cross, with son John and sister Margaret Cross who married Humphrey Clark) mixed amongst the 1653 Jurby wills.

Note that there are no 1662 Archdeacon wills. This is because the old Typed Index bunched them with 1661 and some 1663 wills. The 1664 wills are also included in the 1663 wills. There are also no 1652 Archdeacon Wills; the old Typed Index records the following comment: "the Wills thereof (its [sic] probable) may be in ye following Book for 1653." The 'missing' 1648 wills are included with the 1647 wills, per the old Typed Index. The wills for the year 1646 are also missing; comment in the old Typed Index: 'its wills (as I suppose) may be included in the preceding Book 1645 & in the following Book for ye years 1647 & 1648.' There are no wills for years 1639 and 1640, probably for the same reasons. I once thought to make sense of all this confusion, but gave it up as hopeless and decided that which book a will was in and what number it received was not important. Rather, this is really about the fact of a will's existence and what is in it.

Comments about the Episcopal Wills

The wills from 1600 to 1628 are listed under 'Episcopal Wills', even though half of them will be from the Archdeacon Court. These early wills were not separated by court (Episcopal Court or Archdeacon Court), but run together. The first three films are also a jumble of years, with groups of years following no order. So a group of 1603 wills may follow a group of 1606 wills, 1607 sometimes follows 1608, with 1609 sometimes following 1606, etc. Because of this jumble of years, sometimes the year of a given will might be an educated guess, and might be off by a year or two. If a person's death is recorded at 1610 in a will written [maybe] in 1610, but you have proof that the person was alive in 1612, then consider your proof as the more accurate date. When I printed these will into book form, I organized them according to year, so that they do not follow the order on the microfilm. However, to make your search of the microfilm easier, I have included a table of wills for the first 20 years or so as they occurred on the microfilm.

Comments about Customs

On the Isle of Man in the 1600s and before, it was not uncommon to find two children with the same given name alive at the same time. One would be called 'the elder' or 'senior', and the second was called 'the younger' or 'junior'. However, there was at least one family in the mid 1600s with three Johns alive at the same time, differentiated as John senior, John junior, and John the youngest: see ArW 1663A #92 Braddan will of William Creer.

The term 'nephew' often meant grandchild in the 1600s. Per ArW 1660A #37 Bride will of Elizabeth Moore alias Thompson,: grandson Charles Moore was first listed as a 'nephew', but then 'nephew' was scratched out and 'grandchild' written above it. Another example is EpW 1608E #094 Lonan will of Mallooney Corrin, where he lists 'my sonne Harry', 'my sonne Harryes wiff', and 'my nephye Harreys daughter'. Those we now call 'nephew' were designated 'sister's son', etc. However, in the latter 1600s, nephew started to take on our modern meaning.

Another word / term used for grandchild is 'owes' or 'OO'. The Manx word for grand-(child) is 'oe', pronounced 'oh'. In EpW 1606E #029 Ballaugh will of Daniel / Donald Corlett, his grandchildren are called 'owes', an English word pronounced 'ohs'. It seems that the scribe, as he translated the spoken Manx word into English (all wills at this time were to be written in English), heard 'oes' and wrote 'owes' or, as in the will MmW 1610M #35 Andreas will of John Radcliffe of BallaRadliffe & BallaKelly, and the wills MmW 1611M #05 Michael will of Phinlo Caine, and MmW 1611M #24 Andreas will of Phinlo Crenilt, 'OO'. In EpW 1608E #075 Malew will of Margaret Clerin alias Clark, the scribe wrote 'ow' when designating her grandson Richard Cropper. In EpW 1614E #057 German will of Joney xxxx alias Killey alias Coole, is recorded 'I leave to my sonne Morishe Kyllye and to his son my oo . . .'. EpW 1614E #064 German will of John Shimmin, names 'my Oe, vz, my grandchylde Hugh Shimmine' as his executor.

Another word to watch out for is 'cousin', which does not always mean what we think it means. An example of this is ArW 1689A #002 Braddan will of Sir Patrick Thompson, where he lists his brother's children (his niece and nephews) as his 'cousins'. This will is also an excellent example of the word 'friend' indicating some type of family relationship. Another example of cousin used to mean nephew and niece is ArW 1695A #41 Maughold will of Margery Corkill alias Christian, where she lists two cousins, Robert Quay and Isabel Quay. However, Robert and Isabel are the children of Margery's sister Elizabeth Quayle alias Christian, heir of Ballafayle. See ArW 1689A #157 Maughold for Elizabeth's will where Robert and Isabel are recorded, as is her sister Margery Corkill alias Christian, which makes Robert and Isabel the nephew and niece of Margery. And then there is the will of Richard Thompson, EpW 1602E #109 Malew (he actually died in 1596), where Richard's son John labels his uncle Sir Nicholas (the brother of Richard) as 'cousin'.

In the 1600s and before, a woman on the Isle of Man was legally listed under her maiden name even after marriage. By the 1660s, especially in those parishes experiencing more English influence, this began to change. However, even in the early 1600s, wives from England, or who had English husbands, typically followed the English custom of exchanging their maiden surname for their husband's. Then there are instances where the wife's family was more important than the husband's, so she continued to be listed first under her maiden surname even when the parish had mostly adopted the 'new' English custom. This can be confusing. When it was not clear which name was a woman's maiden surname and which her husband's surname, I indicated the same by writing 'or vice versa' next to it, or by indicating it in some other manner. When I titled each will, I did so using the modern custom of putting the woman's husband's surname first. If she married several times, then the first listed name is the current husband, the next surname was the previous husband, the next surname would be an even earlier husband, etc (I do not think I have seen more than 4 husbands), until the last surname is her maiden surname.

Note also that 'Mrs' is a title, and does not necessarily denote that a woman is married. At that time, unmarried women from prominent families were referred to as 'Mrs'.

It was not uncommon for a woman to revert to her maiden surname if she had been a widow for several years. An example is that of Catharine Kewney / Kinney, whose husband John Cottier died in January 1675/6 (ArW 1675A #020 Lezayre), and who was going by her maiden surname in 1697 when her sister Joney died (ArW 1697A #64 Lezayre). There are other examples scattered throughout the wills.

By law / custom on Isle of Man, if a woman is made executrix in a will and her husband is alive, then he is sworn in her stead. If the married woman is sworn as executrix, that is an indication that her husband is dead and she is a widow. A woman who never married as well as a widow had all the legal right to engage in business, lending and borrowing, testifying in court, being a witness, and being legally sworn to handle the finances of a will or anything else, etc, equal to a man. The only places I have never seen a woman's name was as an appraiser of an Inventory, and as a pledge / security for the Inventory, who was a person who made sure legacies and debts of a will were paid, and that the underage children were taken care of before becoming old enough to receive their legacies.

Per Manx custom, the husband acted legally for the wife in Court. Once he died, she acted legally for herself in all respects, including in Court, or running the farm or the shop. Even when married, on the Isle of Man, women bought and sold and engaged in lending and borrowing and in various businesses in their own right, without the husband involved or acting for her. If she inherited the farm from her father, it was always her farm, and the husband was allowed partial ownership only at her discretion. If they bought land, then it belonged to them, half and half in the southern Island, and two thirds for the man and one third for the woman in the northern Island. When either died, the remaining spouse did not become owner to the other part of the land. Instead, the person who died, be it the man or the woman, gave his or her part of the land and household goods to whomever he or she wished. Often, but not always, when the woman (or man) died and gave their part of land to a particular child, the dying person asked the spouse to leave the remaining part of the land to the particular child. The spouse usually agreed but sometimes did not follow through at his or her own death.

We are use to the spouse automatically inheriting everything when someone dies, but that was not so on the Isle of Man in the 1600s and before. Rather, the testator divided up his or her goods among the children (or siblings if the marriage had not yet resulted in children), with the spouse left his or her legal part. What needs to be remembered regarding a wife's inheritance is that half of all goods (on the south) or a third (on the north) belonged to the woman, which the husband could not give away, so that even if the surviving wife was given nothing (which did not happen, for if the husband forgot, then the Court allowed her some small legacy), she still had a sizable part of the marital fortune which was solely hers to dispose of as she saw fit when she died. And vice versa when it was the wife who died first.

Right after ArW 1631A #027 Michael will of John Quiggin, is a letter to the Vicars of the Isle of Man, dated 24 November 1629, regarding the marrying of couples by license. The license was to be obtained by the couple from Sir Hugh Cannell, and those marrying by Banns were to publish it 3 times in Church. Also, the parish vicars were to be more diligent about punishing adulterers and fornicators as well as anyone else breaking the laws and customs of the Island.

There were two important legal ages on the Isle of Man. The first was age 14. At that age you could make a legal will and do a few other things on your own. But you could not enter into a contract; a person had to be 21 years old in order to do that, or be a pledge or inventory appraiser or supervisor of younger siblings. You also had to be a stable member of the community and financially solvent. A poor relative was not allowed to be a supervisor, presumably because of the temptation to use a child's legacy for his or her own use.

A Marriage Contract from 1631 and a Will from 1673, discusses the age of 14: ArW 1631A #18 Braddan Marriage Contract agreed upon by Edmund Quine and John Lewin, regarding John Quine (nephew of Edmund Quine) and Margaret Lewin (daughter of John Lewin): "the sayd Jo: Quyne and Marg---- Leaune shall love or like one another: & live together as man and wiffe, accordinge to Gods ordinances & lawes of holie church when the sayd Jo: Quyne cometh to lawfull yeares of discretion that is when he is full xiiij yeares of age:" and ArW 1673A #45 Andreas will of William Sayle of the Curragh, where apparently there was a question about his will: "ffeb 13th 1674: Wee finde ye the Testator was at lawfull yeeres, for by certificat out of the Church Registrie, it appeares, hee was borne Apill: the 6th 1659, And beinge buryed the sixe of feb: 1673, by computation his age at his death was 14 yeeres & x[10] monthes, soe that the Courts proceedinge were Legall in this pticular" Another example is that of John Teare, the son of Daniel Teare, weaver of Kiarlayn, who died 5 April 1696, per ArW 1695A #68 Ballaugh. John was christened September 1681, and in November 1696, he went to his stepmother Margaret Crenilt and supervisor Thomas Teare and, because he was 'of age', received the legacy left him by his father. His sister Ellin, christened in July 1684, was still underage, and requested that her uncle Thomas remain in custody of her inheritance from her father. Also, ArW 1685A #69 Andreas of Margaret Quark alias Corlett alias Thompson indicates her son Patrick Quark, born / christened in 1666, was of 'lawful age' at the time of probate in 1686. However, the year / age of discretion was age 21. At that age, a person could enter into a contract and be involved in all other legal proceedings.

Going to the grave of a dead person to swear to the truth of something was a most solemn oath and accepted as the truth. At the graveside would be the wronged person, the vicar / minister who took the oath from the person, and jurors & witnesses and involved family members and others.

The grave gone to would be that of a person related to a controversy, a spouse, a debtor, etc. Once the oath at the grave was given, the matter was finalized and closed. The person who claimed being wronged was expected to be there, and if he or she did not show up, that was considered against them. Once in a great while, the person who was suppose to take the oath on the grave would refuse to do so, which was considered as near proof that the person was in the wrong, and the matter went against him or her. An example of this custom is that involving deceased Catharine Haugh and Ellin Caine alias Cowley: Ellin Caine alias Cowley wife of Daniel / Dollin Caine had been excommunicated by late 1631 because she refused to pay the executors (including William Quayle) of Catharine Haugh for goods bought. Ellin was to swear on Catharine Haugh's grave per note of 15 May 1631 that she paid Catharine for those goods before Catharine died.

In ArW 1656A #27 Jurby will of Ellin Clark alias Creer, daughter Bahie Clark was age 14 but deemed not able to take an oath or take charge as a supervisor. So even though a person was 14, they did not have full rights as an adult. This is also seen in ArW 1628A #07 Marown will of Mally Gawne, where her brother John is 'at years' but considered still young enough (less than age 21) to need his uncle John Kelly as an overseer and guardian.

From JMM vol 2 pp139/140, per F Coakley's website 2003, The Bi-Centenary of the 1733 Manx Coinage: The coinage of the Island, as distinct from that of England, extends over a period of nearly two hundred years, commencing in 1668 and terminating in 1839. The first coin was issued by John Murrey, a Douglas merchant; and the second was in 1709, having been cast in Castle Rushen. Per Frances Coakley, 2012: Mostly, the Manx used English money for transactions during the 1600s. Eventually, they developed their own. However, in ArW 1658A #004 Patrick will of James Sayle, there is a note dated 7 January 1666/7 indicating daughter Ann had been paid the 20s legacy left her, including '5s of Manske halfe crownes', and in ArW 1658A #100 Maughold will of John Stowell / Stole, the testator gives his son 4 Manks half crowns. In an even earlier will, EpW 1603E #085 Arbory will of Wiliam Cubbon (died 22 January 1603/4), the testator leaves his eldest daughter 24 Mansk marks, and his youngest daughter 17 marks. Because the Manx shilling was made lighter than the English shilling, there were 14 Manx shillings to a pound, instead of the 12 English shillings. Thus: 12 Manx pence = 1 Manx shilling, 14 Manx shilling = 1 pound = 12 English shilling, and 1 English shilling = 12 English pence. Abbreviations for pound is '£', for shilling is 's', and for pence is 'd'. The abbreviations were nearly always used, so my transcriptions are replete with these abbreviations.

But the Manx people also apparently had a monetary system: In EpW 1602E #110 Santan will of Thomas Moore who died February 1599/1600, there is recorded a legacy to eldest daughter Marian / Marriad for 20 Manks marks (plus 3 boules / bolls of malt & a firlet of wheat), an indication that Manx coinage existed in some form in 1600. In EpW 1606E #056 Lonan will of William Kewley, he left his granddaughter Margaret Kewley 2 Manks marks. In EpW 1600E #071 German will of Catharine Corris / Quarres alias Kaighin, she indicates that if Bahie Clark marries and takes her uncle's advice (Bahie's uncle is the testator's husband Patrick Corris), then Catharine's executor was to give Bahie one Manx mark. (When Patrick Corris died, EpW 1602E #014 German, he left Bahie 2 sheep in place of the one Manx mark.)

Until the early 1700's, the Manx people were tied closer to Ireland than to England. If someone wanted to run away from their responsibilities, they often went to Ireland. If they were seeking a cure for an ailment, they went to Ireland to drink from the sacred wells there. Sometimes a young person (around age 14) went to Ireland to apprentice in a trade. A brisk business went on between the two, and people married back and forth.

An example of people running away: In February 1604/5, in the Episcopal Wills, Philip Kelly was presented in chapter court, Marown, for fornication with three different women. However, before the court, he had gone to Ireland. One of the women cleared herself, the other two did not.

In the 1600s, when a woman was pregnant, she was careful about not doing anything that might harm the growing fetus. An example of this is the 1637 censure of Sir William Cosnahan, where Dorothy Cooper, who was a witness and also pregnant at the time, refused to testify under oath about negative things (particularly relating to witchcraft) that she knew about Sir William because she was pregnant. But, she said, after her delivery, she would testify to more.

In 1700, according to Bishop Wilson, only about one third of the Manx understood English, even though religious services were preached in both Manx and English in the 1600s. Presentments of several disrespectful church-goers in 1684 indicated that sermons were preached half the time in Manx, and half the time in English.

Divorce was infrequent but happened on the Isle of Man. Most of the time, it seemed to occur because of abandonment, but also for abuse. The innocent party was allowed to remarry. The abuser and the deserter were not.

A husband and wife were expected to live together. When that did not happen, they were 'presented' at Church / Chapter Court, and ordered to do so. If, for example, the wife left because of abuse, the man was admonished to treat his wife properly, or he would be censured and punished, that is, would have to beg forgiveness of her in front of the church congregation, and also spend time in St German's prison (which was a dark dungeon with all the facilities of a medieval dungeon, that is, small windows that shined a little light in the common hall and nothing else).

If a single woman prosecuted a single man for a rape, the ecclesiastical judges impaneled a jury; and if this jury found him guilty, he was returned to the civil court, where, if he was found guilty, the deemster delivered to the woman a rope, a sword, and a ring, and she had the choice to have him hanged or beheaded, or to marry him. In 1699, a Consistory Court ruled on three single men who 'deflowered' but did not rape, different women, two of which resulted in a child. The Court ordered that the men either marry the women or pay the woman a dowry equal to what the father of each woman would have given her. All three men opted to pay the dowry; two of them had been in St German's prison for several days before finally agreeing to comply with the Law.

If a man got a farmer's daughter with child, he had to either marry her or to give her a dowry equal to what her father would have given her.

From the early days on Man, per Viking custom, men and women often set up house for several years without benefit of marriage. Children born of such a union were considered legitimate if the man or the woman didn't have an affair with someone else between the child's birth and the man and woman's marriage, and as long as the marriage occurred within 2 or 3 years. Thus, if the oldest son (or daughter if there were no sons) was born two or even three years before the marriage, he was still considered the legitimate heir of the father. The church made a huge effort to stamp out this custom, so that by the 1700's, having a pre-marital baby became stigmatized. Even then, a child born out of wedlock was considered legitimate if the parents soon married. Unique to the Isle of Man is the custom that the illegitimate baby took the surname of the father, not of the mother, and belonged to the father's family clan, though this custom changed in the 1800s. An illegitimate child would be considered legitimate & be able to inherit as a legitimate child if the parents married within a year or two, and the woman (or man) did not take up with another man (or woman) during that time.

In the early 1600s, if not also later, it was a custom to give an illegitimate child a legacy at the 'discretion of the ordinary', that is, at the discretion of the Bishop, with the local parish priest acting as his substitute. Generally, the child was given a fairly decent legacy. See EpW 1616E #023 Lezayre will of Daniel / Donald Garrett, where his illegitimate daughter Christian was given (at the discretion of Parson Crowe) a sheep & a swine & a ewe & a bowl / boll of oats, and EpW 1616E #026 Lezayre will of Philip Corlett (his illegitimate daughter was to be given a legacy at the discretion of the ordinary).

I have indexed the presentments for fornication and adultery, not because of any purulent interest, but because they sometimes lead to a child (maybe an ancestor?) or to a marriage. Other presentments that indicate relationships or that show an interesting bit of culture, or records the farm where a person lives, are also listed in the index, but many are not.

A frequent punishment for those presented at Church Court is '3 dies ecclia' or '3 dies ecclesia', that is, doing penance by confessing his or her sin / error / fault and asking forgiveness in front of the person's home parish church congregation on 3 different Sundays. Often, a 'penitential habit', that is, special clothing, was worn during the confession, or a bridle, indicating the need for the person to 'bridle' their lying tongue. Penance for various infractions of laws and rules includes the words 'plena ecclesia', that is, the person is to do their penance before a full congregation of the parish church.

However, Jane Huddleston, who was presented for fornication in 24 February 1604/5 Malew chapter court, was given no punishment, because she committed fornication on the promise of marriage. It seems that our ancestors were not so hardnosed about premarital sex.

Sexual indiscretion was called fornication if you were unmarried, and adultery if you were married. Becoming a widow or a widower made you unmarried, so you became guilty of fornication for sexual indiscretion. This was an important distinction. People who committed fornication were sentenced to '3 days ecclia' before 'plena congregation', that is, on three different Sundays, they had to declare their sin and ask forgiveness of God and the full congregation. Those who committed adultery were committed to seven days of the same.

People who were censured for sexual indiscretion were not ostracized from the community in the 1600s. It was not uncommon to see someone censured for fornication or adultery and then, a couple of years later, to have an important position as juror or chapter questman, etc, in the courts. An example of the compassion and acceptance of those who committed fornication is found in the following: Thomas Corlett and Marriad Cowley were censured for fornication, per February 1672/3 Ballaugh chapter court. Thomas performed his penance and was so sorrowful and ashamed that vicar Robert Parre visited him at home several times to encourage him and to keep him from despair, per note dated 24 March 1672/3. In 1631, John Knickle son of Robert Knickle, of Patrick, was presented for fornication with Isabel Corrin. Since this was the first time for John, his sentence was commuted and his father pledged that John would not commit fornication again. But Isabel, presumably because this was not her first time, was committed to 3 days penance in Church after several days in St German's prison. Another first timer was Averick Caine who was presented in 14 March 1662/3 Braddan for fornication with Edward Moore: Her sentence was commuted after she promised a hearty reformation, and Edward was committed to a week in St German's prison plus a 5 shillings commutation fine.

A commutation fine was a monetary or work fine assessed in lieu of the person having to perform his or her penance in church, or some in lieu of going to prison, etc. As in the above example, Edward paid 5 shillings so that he did not have to get up in church and confess his sin / error. The money generally went to the repair of the church or a bridge or some other such thing. Sometimes, the commutation was in the form of work, so that the person was required to repair a bridge or part of the highway, etc, in place of the assessed punishment (prison, or confessing before the church congregation).

But then there is the example of Isabel Crowe: Isabel Crowe & William Carran were presented 1667 Lezayre for fornication. William was an adulterer, and this was the 7th time Isabel was presented for fornication. The punishment for Isabel was to be dragged in Ramsey harbor behind a boat. Or the example of Stephen Caine and Mally Cubbon who were presented at court on 12 May 1668 Marown, for fornication and censured to 3 days penance in the parish church, but a letter dated 7 March 1668/9, written by Sr William Oates, indicates that Stephen Caine 'was not himself' (so therefore not subject to censure), and because he was not himself, Mally Cubbon cleared herself, for which Sir William gave her a certificate, so did not do any penance. Sir Patrick Thompson wrote on 12 March 1668/9, that the parties involved (Stephen Caine & Mally Cubbon) were not to be troubled with this matter any further, and they were freed from the law.

On 6 March 1674/5, in Arbory Parish, found in the Archdeacon Wills, Ellin / Elinor Curry / Charry, was presented for not going to church for 3 Sundays. However, she was deemed not mentally competent ('not compos mentis') as regards her ability to reform, so no punishment was given her.

In the 1600s (and until 1752 in England / Isle of Man), the new year started on March 25th. So January 1667 before the change is actually January 1668 in our reckoning. The standard indication for this is the use of a double year, that is January 1667/8. The starting of the New Year in March leads to a problem for us: November for us is the 11th month on the calendar, but actually obtained its name as the 9th month of the year. The same is true of September (the 7th month before 1752, as its name implies), October (the 8th month), and December (the 10th month). So if, before 1752, you see the month written 8ber or 8th menses, the scribe was referring to October, not to August.

'A year and a day' was used legally in marriages and with deaths. If a spouse died before 'a year and a day' of marriage, the remaining spouse did not automatically own anything made or brought into the marriage by the other person, though this was not always true for a farm that the woman inherited. After a year and a day, the man owned two thirds of the goods and the woman owned one third on the north side, and on the south side, both owned half. This became an issue with John Cosnahan when his wife died after 6 months of 'formal' marriage (see ArW 1644A #79 Braddan), but they were ‘espoused’, that is, promised solely to each other, for some 18 months before marriage. Per custom, a husband had no claim on the dowry of his wife until after they had been married for 1 year and one day. John Cosnahan wanted a husband’s part his wife’s dowry (which would have been 50% in the south part of the Island) and so sued for it on the basis of his ‘espousal’ / betrothal to her.

Also, when someone died, the people who were owed money had a year and a day after probate to bring in their claims. If they brought them in after that time, they were out of luck (unless they had been out of the Country, and then they were expected to bring in their claim within a few day to few weeks). Thus, if you see a claim dated such and so that is legally accepted, you know that the person must have died within the last year. Since probate courts were held every three months, a person could be dead nearly three months before probate, but not more than that. If a will was not probated at the next court after death, a note was made that it was ‘deferred’ until next court (3 months away).

Once in a while, you will see a charge of ‘incest’ in the records. When we think of incest, it is of sex between a parent & child, or between siblings. On the Isle of Man, it was considered incest even if the sex was with your spouse’s sibling or niece / nephew, or your blood uncle’s widow (or blood aunt’s widower), even though no blood relationship existed. On the Isle of Man, it was perfectly legitimate to marry your first cousin, but not your deceased wife’s sister. See 1679 presentment Malew of William Costeen fidler for incest with Catharine Costeen, his deceased wife’s sister. Also, 1651 presentment, Santan Parish of Thomas Quay of Ballaville, Santan, married 30 years without children, was presented for incest with an unmarried woman and having a child by her. For it to be ‘incest’, Thomas probably had an affair with his wife’s younger sister or his wife’s niece, someone who was unrelated by blood.

The word ‘gossip’ is seen frequently. Per the English Oxford Dictionary, a gossip was 1) one’s own godmother or godfather, 2) your child’s godmother or godfather, or 3) a familiar acquaintance, friend or chum. This last definition changed to mean especially a woman’s female friends, which changed to mean the idle talk of women, which changed to today’s commonly understood definition.

Comments about Wills

For the most part, wills were not written & signed when the testator was alive. Instead, they were ‘oral’ (noncupative) wills, with at least two witnesses declaring under oath the wishes of the testator as expressed to them when he or she was ill and thought to be dying.

You will notice many times that I have written ‘on’ for ‘one’ and ‘one’ for ‘on’. The scribes of the 1600s did indeed write ‘on’ when designating the number ‘1’, and ‘one’ for the preposition ‘on’. It was only in the late 1600s that this changed to be consistent with ‘one’ meaning ‘1’, etc. The reason for this may be that old English pronounced the final ‘e’, and the preposition ‘on’ was thus pronounced ‘on-a’, and ‘1’ pronounced ‘on’. This is seen with the word ‘priced’ being written ‘prizd’ with the modern pronunciation, so that two syllables were not enunciated (as pri - zed), but just one.

All adults were required to make a will. If they did not, then the Church (who probated / proved the wills) would decree where the goods went. In that case, all the goods would first go to the unmarried children (it being assumed that the married children, both son and daughters, had received various goods as dowry). If all the children were married, then everything went to them. The living spouse did not inherit, since half (on the south side of the Island) belonged to the spouse anyway, or two thirds (for the man) and one third (for the woman) on the north side. If there were no children, then siblings inherited. Next were parents. Then were the aunts and uncles. After that came cousins, nieces & nephews, etc.

You had to be mentally competent to make a will. Children under the age of 14 were not competent because of concern about undue influence from others with regards to the distribution of their goods, and because it was generally understood that a young child did not understand the gravity of the situation, etc. Those with dementia or an intellectual disability severe enough to prevent self care were also deemed incompetent to make a will. An interesting question of competency came up with the will of William Moore, EpW 1606E #024 Bride. William was purposely violently struck on the head by another man, so that afterwards he could not talk, and which resulted in his death. At the first, the will he made while unable to speak was accepted in court. But then, Edward Christian petitioned the court, and testified along with his brother Sir John Christian, that William was senseless (foolish, lacking in judgment), and that signing William made with his hands were ‘idle signs’ that meant nothing. So the Court rescinded the will and made a decree, making a change with the supervisors. The original supervisors (aunts of the testator) then petitioned the Bishop of Sodor, said that more testimony should have been taken, and besides, the Court made its decree long after the execution of the will ‘when I think they ought not to meddle’. (Our ancestors were annoyed by over-reaching government actions also.) So the Bishop laid a question before the court: Can a dumb man make a will? especially if he is thought to be senseless? And can one man, even though a churchman (Sir John), be sufficient to prove a will, especially when in the favor of his brother? Third, can a will be proved when the testator is unable to swear that it is his last will? Fourth, can the Spiritual Court make a decree, with new executors and overseers, without the consent of the previous executors and overseers, especially if it is after a year and a day? Fifth, can any Record made in Court and bearing no date override a former record that bears a date? It was decided that, while the testator had ‘lost the use of his speech, yet had his understanding and hearing’, and that the signs the testator made with his hands were purposeful and appropriate to the questions asked.

An executor could be any age, including unborn. The Court expected all children to be given a legacy, even if only 6 pence or 6d worth of goods. Married children, of course, were considered to have received their inheritance as dowry when they married. If a married child received nothing at the time of marriage, and it was proved, and that child was not given a legacy in the will, then the married child was made an executor jointly with the other executor[s]. If an unborn child had not been provided a legacy, then the Court made the unborn child an executor jointly with the other[s], provided that the baby lived. Supervisors and pledges made sure that the goods left underage children by legacy & / or by executorship remained in good order until it was legal to give them to the child, at age 14. Sometimes the child received all the goods at once, and sometimes, it seems, the goods were parcelled out a little at a time, with all received by the age of 21 or so. Sometimes a child ‘of age’ (14 or older) would receive all his / her goods, and also be given the goods of & become responsible for the goods of a younger & still underage sibling. If a child was left 10s or 10s worth of goods, then the child was expected to receive that 10s or 10s worth of goods whenever the child came of age. For example, if a petticoat was left an underage child, but the testator said it was okay for the testator’s sister to use the petticoat, it was understood that when a petticoat was given to the now of-age child, it would be in as good of shape as when the testator died and bestowed it on the child. If a 5 year old was left a 3 year old cow, then the child, when of age 9 years later, was expected to be given (by supervisors / pledges) a 3 year old cow.

If a parent died and left a legacy to a child, and then that child died, the goods / land left to the child returned to the mother's family, given first to the siblings, if the parent had any, then to the parents if they were alive, etc. If there were half siblings and full siblings, the full siblings received a double portion of the returning legacy, that is, 2/3s, and the half siblings the remaining 1/3. See the will of Mallooney Cannell who died February 1616/7, EpW 1617E #006 Braddan, and his mother Christian Cannell alias Cannon who died in 1603, EpW 1603E #075 Braddan: Mallooney's will names the full siblings (William, Marriad & Catharine Cannon) and half siblings (Oates, Alice & Elizabeth / Isabel Karran) of his mother ('the goods came by the mother syde', so the 'nexte of kyne of the mothers syde' now received the inheritance Mallooney had been given, 2/3s going to the Cannon siblings and 1/3 to the Karran half siblings).

Children who had inherited from a deceased parent, or from anyone else, and thus had goods to be distributed, were also required to make a will. A will by a child under the age of 6 (an 'infant') was invalid, and the church instead made a decree, distributing the goods per custom. The same was true for a child who was 'underage' (that is, less than age 14 years old). A child 14 and older was assumed to be competent to make a will without undue influence from others. As noted elsewhere, children of age 14 and older were accorded legal responsibilities, including the making of a will, though full adulthood and the full weight of the law did not occur until the age of 21. Punishments were also different. For example, young fornicators were not punished as severely as those 21 years old or close to that age.

It is not uncommon for the testator to call a son his eldest son (or daughter), when, in fact, he is the only son (or daughter). 'Eldest son' (or eldest daughter) designates the oldest child. The will of Phinlo Fargher in the miscellaneous Manx Wills MmW 1634M #18 Marown, makes this clear: He indicates that his eldest & underage son is to be his heir, but if 'the child upon the mother's beareing', that is, an unborn child, is a boy and the eldest son dies, then the unborn child is to be heir (and not Phinlo's daughters who were 2nd & 3rd in birth order).

Siblings and children could not be witnesses to a will. If they were, it voided the will, and the court reverted to making a decree. Sometimes they asked the family what they wanted, and if they would like to continue with the terms of the will as laid out by the deceased person then the Court agreed to it. Other times, the court declared a standard decree, with unmarried children / siblings the inheritors, and a legacy to the spouse once the inventory was brought in. So if Thomas Cleator died and had a son Robert Cleator and one of the witnesses was Robert Cleator, then you know there were two different Robert Cleators, for the son Robert could not be a witness. An example: Before Joney Coark / Quark died 2 October 1657, she made a will, dated 7 September 1657 (ArW 1658A #108 Maughold will of Joney Quark / Coarke / Quork, died 2 October 1657). However, that will was witnessed by the Testator's sisters, which would make this first will invalid. So a second will was made, with appropriate witnesses. But then that will became invalid when one of the witnesses died before probate. Therefore the Court stepped in and divided the inventory in thirds, among the Testator's married sisters.

You will notice in the wills that people would be bequeathed 'half a blanket', or 'a blanket betwixt them', or 'a third of a sheep', etc. On the north of the Island, a woman owned a third of the couple's goods and land; on the south side, a woman owned half. Since they could bequeath only what they owned, then they could leave only 'half' of the land (or a third for a woman on the northside) to the inheritor. Other times, it is clear that poverty made the ownership of a cow, for example, too expensive, so that 3 or 4 or more people might own it. How this worked out in practical living boggles my mind. How do you and your married sibling decide on who gets the blanket?: does one have it one week, and the other uses it the next? Later wills suggest that it was expected that the blanket (or cow or whatever) was to be sold and the proceeds divided amongst the inheritors.

The word 'infant' in the wills does not mean toddler or younger baby, as we would use the word. Instead, it means someone less than age 6, and maybe even someone less than 14 years old. For example, Christian Stephen was an 'infant' when she died, that is, 'not of years of discretion' (which was considered to be age 14), EpW 1618E #009 Michael. Also, Isabel Kerruish died 20 April 1636, described as an 'infant', see ArW 1636A #054 Lezayre. Her father, widower John Kerruish, died 14 April 1634, ArW 1634A #13 Andreas. If Isabel's mother had died within a year or two of father John, the mother's inventory would have been mentioned in John's will, but it is not. Conclusion is, therefore, that Isabel is more than 2 years old, and probably 4 or 5 years old or more. The Manx custom may have stemmed from ancient Roman law that broke the first 20 years of life into seven year blocks: infantia, from birth through age 6 (a time of total care); pueritia, from age 7 through age 13 (a time of increasing exploration of the greater world); and pubertas, age 14 through age 20 (a time of increasing adult duties and expectations while still under adult / parental supervision). (from The Vanishing American Adult, by Ben Sasse, 2017) Dying 'under years' or 'underage' means that the testator / testatrix died under age 14, which ages were not considered old enough to tell others how he or she wanted goods (belonging to them by father's & / or mother's legacies) distributed. When this happened, the Church made a decree as to how the inherited goods the child had from the deceased parent were to be distributed (first to child's siblings, or if there were no siblings, then to the siblings / family of the deceased parent).

In many wills, a child will be given of legacy 6d (6 pence). Sometimes it is because the child has disappointed Mom or Dad, so the child is cut off with relatively little. Most often it is because the child is married and has already received a dowry of a fair amount of goods. If a child is given nothing, then the Court makes the child a co-executor, which allows the child to dip into the goods for 'more' than their fair share if they have already received a dowry. So 6d is given in legacy, so that the married child does not receive more than is fair.

In some wills, 6d legacy was given to each sibling to cut them off from demanding more. This usually happened when the Testator had been married just a short time, when there were no living children or when the children were very young and had a good chance of dying underage (which was not uncommon then).

When young children were left legacies by a deceased parent, it was expected that those legacies would be held in trust for them until they were old enough to receive them. However, sometimes, when the remaining parent was poor, the Court allowed the remaining parent to use the legacies of the children for their food and other support. An example of this is ArW 1675A #062 Andreas will of Daniel Cowin, who left a pregnant wife and three small children, during a time of 'scarcity' for the whole Island.

Per Frances Coakley's website, Wills and Laws of Inheritance: 'It has to be remembered that 6d was a more substantial sum then than now. Even in 1702 it would buy two hens or ducks, six large lobsters, or six dozen eggs, and it went further still in the sixteenth century.'

Once in a while, a child gave up his or her legacy and / or executorship, stating they wanted instead the goods due them in their contract bargain (which spelled out the goods agreed upon for their dowry). An example of this is ArW 1661A #015 Braddan will of Isabel Kermode alias Brew, where daughter Christian refused to be executrix and then her husband Edward Clucas claimed 'certain debts' [those related to the marriage contract / dowry] of Isabel, which meant he (and his wife) must forgo any legacy for they could not have claim to both a dowry debt and a legacy.

Wills often mentioned brothers in law and sisters in law. Per Manx custom, these are the spouses of the testator's siblings, not the siblings of the testator's spouse. As always, where there is a 'rule', there are exceptions. Rarely, an in-law is the spouse's sibling, but that tends to happen only when the testator has no living siblings of his or her own, and it is generally spelled out that it is the spouse's sibling. So if testator John Callister mentions brother in law William Teare, William is the husband of John's sister. Often, the sister, as in this example, is not mentioned, because her husband stands in for her and accepts for her any legacy she might receive from her brother.

Supervisors and overseers of underage children (those less than 14, and sometimes even older but less than 21) were generally the siblings of the testator, or the husbands of the testator's sisters. However, they were expected to be honest & trustworthy citizens of the community, and anything that might impinge on the supervisor's oversight of the children legacies / money would result in the removal of that person from the office as supervisor. For example, in ArW 1674A #37 Michael will of John Callister, his brother Gilbert was made supervisor of the children, but was later removed after he 'fell into poverty', the Court apparently assuming that his poverty would make his judgment questionable with regards to the children's inheritance. At other times, a supervisor was removed when fraud or theft of the legacies was suspected or proved. In ArW 1636A #073 Braddan will of John Kelly, his (half) sister Marriad Kelly was deemed unlawful to be a supervisor when the court discovered she was illegitimate / a bastard. Then there is the brother of Robert Kelly (ArW 1636A #072 Braddan) who was declared 'unsufficient and not lawful' to be a supervisor in charge of the inventory of the underage children. In EpW 1614E #040 Lezayre will of John Crenilt, the mother of the children (the testator's wife) was made supervisor of the underage children with John Cottingham & John Gawne as pledges / sureties. However, 2 years later, on 8 December 1615, the next of kin John Kinread was made supervisor & the goods & the children were given to him, with new pledges John Killip & Thomas Sansbury, because 'the other' who had the goods had 'sent the children abegging', and the previous pledges had not intervened.

Wills included 'pledges' or 'sureties' / 'securities' or some other such word, listing two people (very occasionally one) 'to hold the office harmless' and make sure the children receive their legacies and the creditors were paid. You had to be at least 21 years old to hold this legal position, and also be economically viable. If you were known as a profligate, or if you were poor and / or with questionable honesty, then the court did not allow you to be a pledge. This did not happen often, but it did happen. It was not uncommon for one of the older children or a sibling or spouse (as parent of the children) to be a pledge. This was an important position. Occasionally, a pledge would come to court and complain that the spouse (or close relative or stepparent) who had the 'tuition' (financial responsibility and physical custody, etc) of the children was embezzling the children's legacies, or not feeding and clothing the children properly, and requested that the Court make changes protecting the children. See ArW 1684A #024 Ballaugh will of Vicar Charles Parr, whose wife embezzled the children's goods and then left the Island in about 1689.

All wills were expected to have two witnesses. Rarely, one witness is recorded. If the remaining family agreed to the will, the one witness was sometimes accepted as adequate, but more often, the Court would make a 'Decree' per their wisdom as to how the goods should be divided. Sometimes, they merely repeated the legacies of the will, but sometimes they did not. If the witnesses were closely related to the Testator and therefore would have a conflict of interest in their behalf with regards to inheritance, they were discounted and refused by the Court, and the Court again made a Decree. If all the children / potential legal inheritors of the goods agreed to the will anyway, then the Court generally agreed to let the will stand. This is seen in ArW 1632A #006 Braddan will of Alice Oates alias Casement, where her husband Vicar Robert Oates and two of her daughters Ann and Averick Oates were the witnesses. Another example is ArW 1678A #70 Bride will of Bahie Christian alias Quark, where her daughters and daughter in law were witnesses; before the Court approved the will, it asked all the other children if they approved of the will and its provisions, and when they agreed, the Court approved it.

Sometimes in a will, you will see someone listed as a 'son in law' who is actually a stepson (or 'daughter in law' actually being a stepdaughter), with son in law meaning that he was the son via law by the fact that the son's biological mother was now the new wife of the 'father in law' (that is, stepfather), etc. An example of this is the will of Henry Credgeen, ArW 1674A #12 Andreas, with son William Credgeen & 'son in law' William Cowle. However, William Cowle is actually the son of Henry's wife, Bahie Credgeen alias Cowle alias Kneale, her will ArW 1679A #44 Andreas. Also, ArW 1665A #073 of Ann Fayle als Callow als Corkill (son William Callow, plus her children by William Fayle) & ArW 1665A #074 of her 2nd husband William Fayle ('son in law' William Callow, plus his children by Ann). A 3rd example of this custom is ArW 1633A #44 Lonan of Callighoney Kermode als Lewney als Lewney, when Callighoney's 2nd husband Philip Kermode is recorded as the 'father in law' (that is, father via the law because her mother had married Philip, that is, in modern terms, stepfather) to underage stepdaughter Ann Lewney, Callighoney's daughter by her first husband. As mentioned before, 'nephew' or 'nephie' generally means 'grandchild', though not always, and a nephew or niece was indicated by the term 'brother's daughter / son' or 'sister's daughter / son'. Two more things of which to be aware.

Time was marked by holy days and feast days. Thus, the inventory of a will was to be bought in by Lamas next, or by Michaelmas next. Below is a list of some of those days. As you can see, nearly every month had at least one major holy / feast day.

Candlemas	2 February
Lady Day	25 March
Saint Mark's day	25 April
Feast of St Philip and James the less	1 May
May Day	1 May
Midsummer day OR	24 June
Feastday of Saint John the Baptist's Day
Lammas Day	1 August
Feast of Saint Michael the Archangel, also called Michaelmas	29 September
Saint Simon and St Jude's day	28 October

All Hallows Day is All Saint's Day	1 November
Allhallowtide was the period on or around the date of November 1st
St Andrew's day	November 30

The word 'compurgator' comes up not infrequently, particularly when a person goes to the grave of a person and takes an oath that the dead person owed him / her a debt. The person who was owed the debt & was required to go to the grave of the deceased person & swear an oath, would take at least two 'compurgators' with him / her. Compurgators were people who supported & who vouched for the blameless character or conduct of the person taking the oath on the grave. (from 3rd New International Dictionary, unabridged)

A couple of other obsolete words found in the wills: In EpW 1608E #085 Michael will of Catharine Cannell alias Quackin, a 'pattlen' / 'patlen' / 'pattler' was left to Ann Kelly and to Joney Cordeige. A pattler / patler is probably a 'patlett' / partlet (variants of the same word) which was 'an article of apparel worn about the neck and upper part of the chest, chiefly by woman; orig, a neckerchief of linen or the like; a collar or ruff . . .' --Oxford English Dictionary. In the same will, Ellin Cannell was left a dollan: Is this the same as 'dolum', which was corrupted on the Isle of Man to dollan? Probably. A dolium is 'a large earthenware jar or vessel, more or less spherical, for holding wine, oil, or dry commodities, etc.; hence in mod. use, a cask' ---Oxford English Dictionary Or, from the 3rd New International Dictionary, a 'partlet' is a covering for the neck and shoulders worn by women with a separate fill-in for low necklines or of a decorative neckline of an undershirt made of embroidered or pleated gauze or muslin & finished with a small ruff or frill

'Muffler' is an article of clothing frequently left in legacies in wills, as it was in the above will EpW 1608E #085 Michael will of Catharine Cannell alias Quackin. A muffler is 'A sort of kerchief or scarf worn by women in the 16th and 17th century to cover part of the face and the neck, either for partial concealment when in public, or as a protection against the sun or wind', or 'A wrap or scarf (usually wool or silk) worn round the neck or throat, by both men and woman, for warmth' ---Oxford English Dictionary

A cliw / clue / clew of yarn is a 'ball' of yarn (or thread) per the Oxford English Dictionary.

You will see people left 'diaper' napkins, etc. Diaper is a type of weave, and a diaper napkin does not refer to something used for a baby's bottom, but to a napkin used at mealtimes.

A 'daymoth' of hay or land, was the amount of hay (or land) that could be mowed in a day, shortened to day-mow / day-moweth, and then to daymoth.

Rackentrees were common in Inventories. The Oxford English Dictionary does not have a listing for rackentrees, but it does for 'rackan', which is an 'apparatus by which cooking is suspended over an open fire'.

Turf spades are often mentioned in wills. These were specially made spades for cutting blocks of 'turf' / ancient compacted moss etc., for heating. With little wood on the Island, 'turf' was used for heating and cooking.

The well-to-do often had silver spoons. In EpW 1604E #034 Maughold will of William Cowle, he indicated 7s 8d went into making a silver spoon that he left to his son Patrick.

'Stirk' is mentioned in the wills frequently in the latter part of the 1600s. A stirk is a bull or a cow, generally older than 1 year and younger than 2 years, and is a British term. Its use is an indication of how much closer the Isle of Man had become to England versus Ireland by the latter 1600s. A 'gimmer', also an English term, is a female sheep one year old. Another English term is 'hogg' or sometimes 'hog', which is not a pig, but is a young sheep, a year old or less, that has not yet been shorn.

You will see the word 'ascited' scattered through the wills & presentments. Ascite is an obsolete word for 'to cite' (as in citation) or 'to summon', per the Oxford English Dictionary. The Manx in the 1600s seem to use the second meaning, to summon. The word 'respite' is also used, and means 'postpone', that is, postponed until the next Court.

Not 'compos mentis' or 'non compos mentis' means that the person is not mentally competent. In the presentment of Ellin Curry on 6 March 1674/5 Arbory, who missed 3 Sundays of church, she was given no punishment because she was 'not compos mentis'. When Deemster George Stanley, deemster, made a second will (ArW 1635A #05 Arbory), one of the witnesses, George Whetstone, refused to swear that George was in perfect memory or that he was 'compos mentis' to make the second will, and his son Mr John Stanley said his father was 'unfit then to make a will' and referred the Court to the former will. Witnesses confessed, at the time of the second will making, that the testator was 'unfit then to make a will, being then disturbed & disquieted'. Therefore the Court annihilated and frustrated this alleged will and destroyed the same. NOTE, that Deemster George married his second wife Jane Stevenson before 1604 (Jane's mother Alice Stevenson alias Prescott died in 1604, wrote a will mentioning her 'son in law' George Stanley), and had several children by his first wife, suggesting that he was born 1570 or before, making him at least 65, and perhaps older than 70, so he may have had some dementia at the time of his death. Henry Lesquire / Squire of Castletown, will EpW 1716E Malew, was also declared not 'compos mentis'; so therefore his will was invalidated, & so the court, when no blood relation came to probate court, decreed his stepson George Stole / Stowell as administrator of the will

Wills were expected to be made freely, without anyone putting words into the testator's mouth. So when the Court deemed the wife (Jane Stevenson) of Deemster George Stanley (ArW 1635A #05 Arbory) a 'prompter of words' when he made his second will, the second will was deemed invalid. (George was also declared not 'compos mentis' at the making of the second will, another reason it was declared invalid.)

You will frequently see 'cards' in the inventory and left as legacies. I suspect these are not playing cards, but rather weaving cards with a varying number of holes in them (the simplest is 4 holes in each corner) that were rotated to make patterns, and used to make strong bands of various widths. Episcopal Will 1606E #129 German will of William Cooper lists in the inventory 'woolen cards' and 'linen cards', that is, cards used when working with wool yarn, and cards used when working with linen yarn. Cards have been created and developed worldwide for over 2000 years, and depending on the area, they were used for belts, or saddle girths & reins & bridles, or to hang things up, or for garters, even sewn together edge to edge to create a robe, etc. I have used weaving cards to create a very long one inch patterned band that I then used, by weaving it, to make a seat and a back rest for a chair. My cards were made of cardboard, with 4 holes at each corner. Our ancestors' cards would have been made of heavy leather or wood or ivory or bone or tortoise shell, etc., and of various shapes with holes placed in various locations. The more cards used, the wider the band will be. The more holes in a card, the fancier the pattern that can be created. An excellent book on the subject is Card Weaving, by Candace Crockett, first published 1973 Interweave Press, Loveland, Colorado, United States, and revised & republished in 1991.

Per Frances Coakley's website, Wills and Laws of Inheritance: 'Corps presents are the effects or money that were liable to the church out of the deceased's (Deceadt) estate' Uncommonly, the words 'corps presents' were used in the will, though more usually the separate charges were listed instead.

Per Frances Coakley's website, The Battle of Santwat plus The Battle of Santwat by CH Cowley, 1927: Apparently in 1098, there was civil war on the Isle of Man, between the native Celts and the 'foreign' Norsemen 'newcomers' who had actually lived there for many decades. (This is a prime example of the 'newcomers' being considered intruding foreigners and not belonging even though their grandparents had been born and raised there.) Earl Ottar lead those of Viking descent, and Macmarus, Celtic leader of the south, lead the others, the older Celtic inhabitants who had settled the Island some 700 years previously. During this battle, the women of the south side (those of Celtic ancestry) joined their men in battle and turned the tide, so that forever after, in gratitude, the women in the south 'owned' half the goods of the married couple, while the women in the north (where the Vikings had predominantly settled) continued with only a one-third ownership. Also during the battle, both leaders were killed. Note that Magnus, King of Norway arrived not long after the battle and, with the Island weakened by the recent civil war, made the Isle of Man his own and reigned there for six years.

An interesting note, is the mention of 'a seale of office wth the three legges of Mann' found in the will inventory of Mr James Noyes, water bailiff, who died in 1607, EpW 1607E #011 Malew. It is the only mention that I have seen of that symbol.

Comments about Given Names

On the Isle of Man, even through the 1600s, the Scandinavian manner of naming children occurred. Thus, the first son was named after the paternal grandfather, the 2nd son after the maternal grandfather, and the 3rd son after the father. The first daughter was named after the maternal grandmother, the second after the paternal grandmother, and the third after the mother. The result of this was that there were a lot of people with the same names.

Patronymics were used to differentiate people. This took the form of naming a person's ancestors for 3 or 4 generations back: Per AW Moore, Thom-Hom-Homy was Thomas the son of Thomas. Juan-Jack-Ned was John the son of John the son of Ned. And then there is Tom-Billy-Sam-Harry-Phaul, which I will leave for you to figure out. Or a physical description differentiated the person, such as Illiam Dhone (Brown William). Where a person lived, or their work, or their hobby, or any number of things would be used to tell people apart. Thus we see in ArW 1687A #14 Arbory, the witness William Watterson alias fidle, who played the fiddle. Or in an Arbory presentment dated 25 February 1663/4, with 'witness John Keoeene alias clerk', that is, John the clerk. Or ArW 1636A #062 Bride will of Margaret Kneale alias Cowle, dated 1636, where 'John Christine als Phillip' is one of the pledges; I assume it means that Philip is John's father.

Annas, which I have often listed as 'Ann' in the index, seems instead to be the same name as 'Agnes': I came across an Agnes Illerea, wife of Philip Cowley, in ArW 1628A #56 Ballaugh will of Nicholas Quackin. The Ballaugh Parish register lists her as "Annas Illerea alias Cowley" when she was buried 6 April 1636. In EpW 1603E #032 Michael will of William Kissage, he names a sister Agnes Kissage; in his brother's will (EpW 1603E #062 Ballaugh will of Thomas Kissage), she is recorded as 'Annas Kissaigg'. In EpW 1602E #123 Michael will of Hugh Quay, his wife is recorded as 'Agnes eni ylrea', but in her will 18 months later (EpW 1603E #063 Michael), she is recorded as 'Ann eni lrea'.

Alice morphed from the Celtic names Allis and Ailes, as well as other spellings as it gradually morphed.

Averick is the same as Arick and Avrick; she was the daughter of Godred, king of the Isle of Man in the late 1100s. She was also heiress / Queen of Mann who married John de Courcy & ceded her heirship and right in the Isle of Mann to Simon de Montacute, knight, A.D. 1305.

Bessy, of course, is Elizabeth, and Nelly is Ellin, which became Ellinor in the late 1600s.

Callighoney is the same as Cooney; 'Calli' / 'Caly' is the female version of 'Giola' / 'Guilley', both meaning 'servant'. Thus Callighoney means 'the servant of Cooney' (Cooney means 'helpful' in Manx, or 'handsome' in Irish), with the given name Callighoney sometimes shortened to Cooney.

Callum and Collumb are the same male name.

Christian: The name Christian was a common surname on the Isle of Man: It was also used as a given name but only for girls. The comparable masculine name is Christopher (or Gilchrist in the older form, which sometimes was transformed to Gilbert), never Christian.

Custal is also a name for Christopher, and can be seen in ArW 1683A #28 Lezayre will of John Curghey of Ballakillingan, and Christopher / Custal Taggart nephew (through wife Margaret Taggart, his parents are dead) of Philip Cannell of Douglas will 1683A #03 Braddan. Cristen & Cristal & Custal all mean 'belonging to Christ', per W. Cubbon, 1923.

Dot and Dolly are nicknames for Dorothy, just as now.

Ebod: The female name Ebod has various spellings: Ybod, Obad, Ibod, etc., and is sometimes a nickname / pet name for Isabel, but I have not seen Ebod & Isabel used interchangeably in the wills I have transcribed.

Gilchreest (the servant on Christ) is Christopher, or sometimes Gilbert. Gubbon was not so very uncommon in the early 1600s; it often became Gilbert later on. Another spelling for Gubbon is Cubbon, a switch of 'G' for 'C', just as the given uncommon name Germode is Kermode as a surname.

Donold: The given name 'Donald / Donold' morphed in the mid to late 1600s to 'Daniel'. Donold was originally 'Donnell', which is the same name as 'Dollin', since the Manx often interchanged 'n' and 'l' when speaking [think of 'chimley', a common mispronunciation in childhood for 'chimney']. The back to back wills of Jane Cannell alias Quayle & husband John Cannell (ArW 1697A #27 Michael and ArW 1697A #28 Michael), the name of the witness and pledge Dollin Cannell is recorded in all its forms: 'Dollin', 'Donold' and the latest and final form, 'Daniel'.

Ewan / Euan / Huan are sometimes used for Hugh / Hughan (Hughan is the form seen in the early 1600s), and sometimes for John, and sometimes as given names in their own right. In ArW 1656a #44 Bride will of Mark Joughin, a man who was both witness and pledge is recorded both as 'Huan' Cottier and 'Ewan' Cottier.

A note about the 'H' in the name Huan, etc: Every once in a while, a capital 'H' looks like 'ly'. Two examples are found in the miscellaneous Manx Wills, the first being 'Huan' Crowe, which looks like 'lynan', in the 1633 controversy regarding the tithe due from William Garrett, and the second a few pages later, being the word 'Holme' town, which looks like 'lyolme', in the 26 July 1632 controversy regarding the tithe corn to be paid on land possessed by Silvester Radcliffe.

Ginoe is an old fashioned given name that apparently became William, at least per ArW 1631A #010 Braddan will of Catharine Creer alias Quine alias Quane alias Lewin, who had a son Ginoe Quine, but in a post will note, his name is recorded as 'William' Quine. Then there is Gilnow / Gilnoe, which is sometimes recorded as Ginoe, and also may have become Gilbert or William, as in Gilnowe Garret, witness to the will of John Garrett junior, ArW 1649A #100 Lezayre.

Hugh is sometimes recorded as Ewan and vice versa, but not always. In the early 1600s, the given name of 'Hughan' is sometimes seen. It is easy to see how Hughan could morph into both Hugh and Ewan.

Isabel is sometimes recorded as Elsabeth or even Elizabeth, which is not Elizabeth, though I have seen one or two instances where Elsabeth / Isabel morphed into Elizabeth (mother Elizabeth Freer als Teare als Mason's will ArW 1654 #45, indicates a daughter named Isabel, but the stepfather John Freer gives it as Elizabeth, ArW 1658A #044). I suppose if you say Isabel and Elsabeth just right, they sound the same. This tripped me up for a while, but then I saw too many Isabels who were also Elsabeths, which I originally indexed as Elizabeth, only to realize after a while, that Isabel and Elsabeth are the same person. Other examples: EpW 1601E #031 Braddan will of Margaret Christian naming stepmother Isabel Wattleworth & Margaret's brother EpW 1612E #009 Bradan, naming stepmother as Elizabeth Wattleworth, and EpW 1602E #102 Braddan will of Joney Karran, naming aunt Isabel Karran, and will of her half brother EpW 1617E #006 Braddan will of Mallooney Cannell, naming his aunt (the sister of his mother's 1st husband) Elizabeth Karran. Not knowing the relationship between Elizabeth & Isabel would lead to confusion with the will of Elizabeth Kelly alias Cubbon, EpW 1606E #059 Marown, with sons James Kelly & Lewis Kelly, with supervisor Parson Edmund Stephen, who died two years (EpW 1608E #089 Marown) later with Elizabeth recorded as 'Isabel', who was deceased, with sons James Kelly & Lewis Kelly. Another example is EpW 1607E #068 Maughold will of Catharine Corkill, whose underage daughter is named 'Elzabeth', but then is named 'Isabel' in a note underneath the witnesses; the note states that 'Isabel' died before her mother and so no decree needed to be made (because she had not inherited from her mother as her mother Catharine's will provided). A further note, per W. Cubbon, 1923, Ysbal & Isbal mean fair Eliza, which is another connection between Isabel and Elizabeth. Kneen indicates the Latin form is Elisabetha, which is the same as Ysbal; he also indicates that the Biblical name 'Elizabeth' first came to the Isle of Man as Isabella. Therefore, especially in the early 1600s, if you are looking for an Isabel, check also the name Elizabeth, and vice versa, for the same woman may be listed sometimes under one name, and sometimes under the other.

Joney: In 1515, Johnnet Ine Kerderagh had a parcel of land of 6d yearly rent in German Parish, and Johnnet Ine Body also had a parcel of 6d in German. 'Johnette' (little John) is the original female given name which was very occasionally seen in the early 1600s. (See EpW 1608E #042 Ballaugh will of Joney Craine alias Garrett, recording her daughter Joney as 'Johnie'.) Joneta and Joney are also used interchangeably. (See 11 June 1605 chapter court in the Episcopal Wills, when Joney / Joneta Cromy and John Creer were presented for fornication.) It morphed into Ginnett and Jennet by the late 1500s to early 1600s, then into Joney (though in the Episcopal Wills 8 February 1602/3 Lezayre presentments, Jonie eni Lowrie / Lorie is also named as 'Joneta'), and Joney became Judith in the mid to late 1700s, except for Ginette Calcott who married John Pickard / Pigott: They married 1655 Malew, but by 1673, she was going by the name of Jane. Another example of Joneta & Joney used interchangeably in the early 1600s is that of Joney Cottier who was presented with John Blackburn on 8 June 1602 for fornication, with the presentment recorded again after EpW 1602E #095 Andreas, as Joneta Cottier & John Blackburn. The given name 'Jonrie', probably another 'Joney', is recorded in EpW 1608E #05 Lonan will of Joney Moore alias Norris. See also Episcopal Wills, Andreas Parish 15 June 1605 chapter court, presentment of Joney Joughin for having fornication with two different men: She is recorded both as 'Johnie' and as 'Joneta'.

Mally is a nickname for Mary, and was sometimes used that way in the 1600s, rather than as a name in its own right. See ArW 1676A #13 of Mary / Mally Stewan als Kinnish, where she is listed as Mally in her Will, and Mary in her Inventory.

The male name Mallooney may once have been McLewny, another example of slurring over letters and sounds. 'McLowney Coobright' was listed in the 1660 defuncts of Lezayre Parish, dated 11 February 1659. But in his will, ArW 1660A #44 Lezayre, he is recorded Maloynny MacYchobright. An example of slurring over letters is seen with the word 'moveable', which in several wills from the 1610, give & take, it is recorded as 'moable'.

Marriad is Maryott / Maryet, or 'little Mary'. Marian seems to be the same as Marriad, and they are used interchangeably, with Marian seen in the first decades of the 1600s mostly in the southern part of the Island, and then seeming to fall out of favor.

The name Oates stems from a Scandinavian man (a Viking probably named 'Otts' who settled on Man about 900-1000AD). His children probably took the 'surname' of McOtts (Otts son), which lost the 'Mc' to become just Oates. The given name of Oates continued for over 600 years before not being used as a first name any more.

Pattoon: I have listed Patton / Patton separate from Patrick, but there is some indication that at least sometimes, they are the same person.

Randle and Randolph and Reynold and Ronold are the same person.

An name I found in the early 1600s is 'Sussott' or 'Sissott'. J. J. Kneen, 1937, indicates spellings of 'Sessott' and 'Sissott', and states that the name is the diminutive of Cecilia, that is 'little Cecilia'. Cecilia is also found as 'Sissily' / 'Syslie' / etc.

Comments about Surnames

Manx surnames and given names and their spellings were fluid and morphed over the years, not stabilizing until the 1700s. An example is ArW 1628A #18 Marown will of Joney Lewin, whose surname in the space of ten short lines was recorded as 'Lewin', 'Looyne' and 'Lewne'. If you do not find a surname under an expected spelling, then look under different spellings. I made an empirical decision to list most surnames under one (generally the modern) spelling, so that families could be studied more easily, with names easier to find and compare, but sometimes included the older form. The transcribed will still contains the original spelling.

A holdover from Viking days is the Scandinavian prefix 'Inne' / 'Ine', which means 'daughter of.' Variations of 'Ine' are 'Yne' and 'Ini', etc. 'Mac' means 'son of'. So the sons were called, for example, MacNemeer, but the daughters were called IniNemeer. By the 1700's, this differentiation is rarely seen, with the masculine form becoming common for both.

An oddity of Manx surnames is the large number of surnames starting with 'C', followed closely by 'K' and the sound-related 'Q'. Originally, the surname was 'Mac' and then the name of the father, per the Scandinavian form. But on the Isle of Man, the 'Mac' of a surname became simply 'C' or 'K' or 'Q' as the 'm' sound was slurred over, then became silent and finally was dropped. So MacWilliam became Quilliam, MacAlly became Caley, MacAllen is Callin, MacAllister is Callister, etc., etc. Another example of slurring over letters, not in a name, is seen with the word 'moveable', which in several wills from the 1610, give & take, it is recorded as 'moable'.

To add to your confusion, in my Index, some surnames sometimes have two listings: the old name (Knackle, Booye, Boddough, Kinry [McHenry], Kneale [McNeal], etc), and the Anglicized name (Knickle, Boyde, Harrison [Harry's son], Nelson [Neal's son], etc). So Booye / Boye is listed also under Boyde. Boddough / Voddy are listed under Boddough and Voddy. Mostly, though, I have not made a double entry.

As mentioned previously, there was a propensity for the Manx in earlier years to speak an 'l' for an 'n', and vice versa [think of 'chimley', a common mispronunciation in childhood for 'chimney']. Thus, Crellin and Crennel may be the same family, but they seem to have separated rather early and so are listed separately. See ArW 1670A #56 German will of Mullineux Moore, for an example of this: His given name is 'Mullenex', yet in one place, it is spelled 'Munnellext'. Another example is Dollin and Donnell, which morphed into Donold, which became Daniel by the 4th quarter of the 1600s. (See ArW 1682A #37 Jurby will of Donold Kelly; he was buried as 'Dollin' Kelly.) And third, in a note dated 29 August 1671 in the Archdeacon Wills, we see Averick Willson als Tylsley recorded, but in the Braddan parish register for her burial she is recorded as Avrick Wilson als Tinsley. Crinnell is listed under the modern spelling of Crenilt, however, and not under Crellin. The letters 's' and 'r' had the same problem as 'l' and 'n' in early Manx, so Costeen became Corteen (that is how the Costeens are listed in the old Typed Index created in the late 1800s / early 1900s) but I have listed the two families separately. They later became Cotteen. I have listed these separately, so check all three listings. AW Moore in Manx Names, 1906, indicates that Conilt / Conill / Coonill, etc, 'are probably merely forms of Cannell.' Sometimes I have triple listed this family, sometimes not, so do the double checking again. WW Gill, in A Third Manx Scrapbook, indicates the following: 'old Manx MacGilconill, MacGilhonylt and MacConylt, modern Manx Cannell.'

Surnames starting with the letter 'M' are sometimes written starting with the letter 'V'. An example of this is ArW 1674A #25 Santan will of Catharine Quayle alias Quinney, where Thomas Martin is an appraisor and a pledge, and his surname is written both 'Martine' and 'Vartin'. The same is seen for Mark / Vark, Moughton / Voughton, etc.

The letters 'r' and 'n' were sometimes exchanged one for the other. Thus, Knickle / Kneckell, the more common form, is the same as Creakill / Crekill.

Summary of some letter substitutions:

l ↔ n: Crellin ↔ Crennell, Mulleneux ↔ Munnellext, Dollin ↔ Donold, Tylsley / Tyldesley ↔ Tinsley
m ↔ v: Martin ↔ Vartin, Mark ↔ Vark, Moughton ↔ Voughton
r ↔ n: Knickle / Kneckell ↔ Crekill / Creakill
r ↔ s: Corteen ↔ Costeen

An unusual n / l substitution was with the word rackentree, which was recorded as rakeltrie in EpW 1605E #025 Santan will of John Quayle.

In the early and mid 1600s, the surname 'Christian' was abbreviated 'Xpin' or 'Xpian' (the Greek Χρ plus the anglicized in or ian ending). As time went on, the abbreviation became shorter ('Xtn') or sometimes Xtian. Later, the name was mostly spelled out. Scribes also abbreviated the Greek spelling of the name to 'Xpo', from the Greek for Christ: Χριστός, Chi-rho-iota-sigma-tau-omicron-sigma, or, Christos / Christ.

The Bittle family have been on the Isle of Man since at least the 1500s. However, In the 1511/1515 Manorial Rolls, the name is spelled 'ap Ithell', and in later Manorial Rolls of the 1500s as 'Apthell' and Abythall' and 'Bithell'. By the early 1600s, it had morphed into 'Bitchell' and Bithell before finally becoming Bittell and Bittle.

Bridget was a popular saint on the Isle of Man, and many were named after her. Wait, you say; I rarely see that name. Girls named Bridget were often nicknamed Bahie, which by the 1600s, if not before, had become a given name in its own right. Then there is 'Breedey', a form of 'Vridey', both of which are forms for 'Bridget'. Men were named 'Mac Giolla Bridget' (the son of the servant of Bridget), or Mac Brighde which became Bridgetson (the Anglicized form), which became 'Bridson'. John Bredey was a questman in Santan in 1663. In Santan defuncts for 1663, per the Archdeacon Wills book, he was listed as John Bredey. When his will was written, his name was first written as 'John Bredey', but that will was crossed out, and re-recorded under the name of 'John Bridson', though the surnames of his brothers Thomas and John (yes, a 2nd John) were still recorded as 'Bredey'. See ArW 1661A #110 Santan will of John Bridson / Bredey, who died April 1663. The 1658 Articles of Marriage of his son Thomas included with the will records his surname as 'Brideson'. By the way, the parish church of Bride was originally the parish church of St Bridget (Manx Skeeyley Vridey or Vreeshey = Brigit's or Bridget's parish). See AW Moore Manx Surnames pages 34-35, and 139, for a discussion of this.

The surname Caine seems to have various spellings: Kane and Keane per Leslie Quilliam, 1988. Also, the name Kyine / Keyine is an early surname that seems to be the surname Caine. A different spelling of 'Kyine' was found after EpW 1610E #009 Rushen will of Joney Taylor alias Watterson, as follows: 'A note of such debts as Creditors doe eyehe[?] and challenge of Hughe Kyaine and the', which suggests that the phonetically spelled 'Kyine' is the same as 'Caine'.

Callister, per AW Moore, originates from the Greek Alexander, which which is the same as 'Alister' [take the 'an' out of Alexander and you get Alexder, or Alister], and his son would be mac Alister, which became Callister on the Isle of Man. Kneen indicates that 'Alistryn' is a form of Alexander, which was seen on the Isle of Man both as Alistren / Alistryn & in its Manx form as 'Callistren' in the early 1600s.

In my Index, Quole / Quoole is listed under Coole, as is Cooil (which is a 2nd modern spelling) and Cooley.

Corjeage and Cordeige and Coraige / Corraige seem to be the same family, but are recorded under Coraige, Corjeage, and Cordeige; sorry about that, but I couldn't decide which to use. So check all three names / spellings.

WW Gill states that the surname Corjeage is 'A name of many disguises', including MacQuartag (found in 1513), Quaydeake (1540), Quigage (1594), Quidyacke (1598), Quidiacke (circa 1600), and Cordaige (1636). My research has found the following variations: 'Quidiage' per EpW 1601E #082 German will of Henry / Harry Quidiaige / Corjeage of Peel. In will EpW 1600E #075 Michael will of Joney Quayle alias Cordeige / Cardiff, her maiden surname is recorded as 'Cardaige' and 'Cardyff' and 'Corlett', with none of the names crossed or scribbled out, and each surname used only once with no repeat. On 2 October 1603 in Malew chapter court, Margaret 'Quideage' was presented for fornication Cloage and Cluage and Cluaige and Cloake and Clwaige are under Clague. In EpW 1606E #040 Arbory will of John Sherlock, 'Henrie Clwaig' was owed 6 shillings; in a copy of the will, & a copy of the will, EpW 1607E #42 Arbory will of John Sherlock, 'Henry Cloake' was owed 6s; Clwaig and Cloake are the same surname, and were anglicized to Clague.

Corrin / Carran / Karran / Carown, etc., which may all be the same family, just different clerk spellings, are listed separately because I wasn't sure whether or not they were all the same family. Carran and Karran seem to be used interchangeably, at least sometimes. In the will of mother Catharine Carown alias Quirk ArW 1666A #29 Rushen, the surname of the children John & William & Alice is 'Carown', but in the will of daughter Alice Gawne alias Carran, the surname of her & the 2 brothers John & William is 'Carran' or 'Charin'.

While Caralaugh became Careful in the late 1700s - 1800s, it is listed under the old spelling. (Note: In the late 1500s, per AW Moore in Manx Names, an English family named 'Careful' migrated to the Isle of Man, and their surname was translated into Manx, and became, 'Caralaugh'.)

Caskill which became Castle is under Caistill.

Camaish and Comish are separate, though the families are probably the same, just different regional spellings, which was also spelled 'Comaiz' and 'McComaiz' in the northern Island. For example, in ArW 1632A #034 Andreas will of John Comish, one son is listed as 'John Comaish jun.' in the body of the will, and 'Jo: Comaiz junior' in a note at the bottom of the will page.

Colleash / Collish / Colleash, etc., is under Colleish and also under Quilleash, which they became by the mid 1670s, though some in the family kept the old spelling. Quilleash is listed only under the more abundant Quilleash.

I have chosen to use Cowin for the surnames Cown / Cowin, and Lewin for Lewn / Lewin, etc.

Quott / Quotts became Coat / Cote / Coats by the late 1600s. An example is Ellin Halsall who married William Quott on 2 February 1661/2 Malew. A relative records her name as 'Ellin Cote' (ArW 1684A #012 Malew will of Anthony Halsall). The Malew burial entry for her in 1719 lists her as Ellen Coat als Halsall, and her will (ArW 1719A #05 Malew) records her as Ellinor Coat. In ArW 1692A #92 Maughold will of Thomas Lewney, he left a waistcoat (spelled 'wesquott') to a brother in law.

Cotch: There is another seemingly related surname, that has caused origin problems for both AW Moore and Leslie Quilliam, and that is 'Cotch'. The surname of Thomas Cotch, ArW 1684A #048 Braddan, weaver of Douglas, is recorded both as 'Chotch' and 'Choats', which suggests that Cotch and Coats are the same surname. His wife Ann Cowin died December 1701, and her will is recorded in the Episcopal books under 'Cotch', and her burial listing in Braddan is recorded as Ann Cowin als Cotch. His father is 'Christopher Cotch', but no burial or will is found for him under any name. I think the 'Choats' is a red herring, and that the Cotch family is a separate family. By the 1630s, they seem well settled primarily in the German / Patrick area. 1628 presentments indicate they were farmers and fisherman in the Patrick / German area. Episcopal wills find them in Patrick, German, Santan and Marown in the early 1600s. They are not present in the 1511 Manorial Rolls. The Cottier family, per the 1511 - 1515 Manorial Roll, lived mostly in Bride, Lezayre, Jurby, with four families in Arbory and Rushen and Braddan, which does not overlap with the Cotch family. Since Cotter families are found in both the north and south side, it argues against the family name being changed simply due to regional pronunciation differences. This also encourages my conclusion that the Cotch family and the Cottier / Cotter family are not the same family, and that the Cotch family arrived on the Isle of Man in the mid to late 1500s. There is a Coag family in Bride in 1511, with them last seen on the Isle of Man in 1630s when Episcopal Wills books record their wills. A case could be made for Coag morphing into Cotch, but that is a stretch.

AW Moore indicates Cottingham, the original English name, morphed into Cottiam and Cottiman on the Isle of Man. For example, in ArW 1658A #38 Ballaugh will of Marriad Cottingham / Cottiam alias Kelly, the surnames 'Cottingham' and 'Cottiam' were used interchangeably. Then there are the wills of two sisters: Margaret Cottiam died in 1682, her will ArW 1682A #49 Maughold, lists siblings Robert & Ann & Joney & Margery. When Ann died in 1686, her will ArW 1686A #25 Maughold, her maiden surname is recorded as Cottiman, and her siblings Robert & Joney are listed under that surname; brother in law William Stowell / Stole married sister Margery, and her surname when married was recorded as 'Cotteam' & 'Cottiam'. When Ann was married to Daniel Cowle on 17 January 1681/2 in Maughold, her surname was recorded as 'Cotteam' & 'Cottiam' also. However, I have listed Cottiam and Cottingham and Cottiman separately. Check all three.

I have read that Colquit and Calcot are also the same family, which seems likely to me, though they seem to have separated by the 1600s. AW Moore indicates Calcott is a contraction of Caldecott, meaning 'cold cot', both are listed under Calcott. Cormode and Kermode are the same family, the spelling changing depending on the parish and who recorded the name, and listed separately in the index.

Cotter is under Cottier. A spelling from 1600 is 'Cotthur' (ArW 1600E #056 German will of Marriad Boddaugh alias Cotthur / Cottier). Other spellings include Cottar, Cottear, Cotteire, and Cotcher.

Cowne / Cowen / etc, are listed under Cowin. Conley is under Connelly.

Cowell is under Cowle. Note that the Cowle family is not the same as the Cowley family; these two families have entirely different origins. The same is true for the Killey and Kelly families, but Court scribes were not careful about surname spellings for Kelly and Killey when recording names, so be sure to check both listings in the Index.

Crobbin is under Crebbin. Credeen / Credjeen / Cregeen are under Credgeen.

AW Moore indicates that 'Creer' probably comes from MacFreer. W.W. Gill indicates that Creer has taken the following forms / spellings over the years: MacCeere, 1513; MacCreere, 1521; MacCryer (MacCreere, Sloane MS.), 1570; Cryar, 1601; Creer, 1623. He also states that 'Freer' also exists, but as MacCreer is much earlier, Freer is either an English incomer or a deliberate reversion to the basis of MacCreer; the former supposition is the more probable. Norman frere, "brother," then "friar." In EpW 1606E #064 Braddan, the testator is recorded as Catharine 'Crier', a variant of W.W. Gill's 'MacCryer' and 'Cryar'.

Cowper and Cooper are the same name, and under Cooper. Curleod and Curlett are under Corlett.

The surnames Cundrie / Cunnergy / Connery are all the same names: See the ArWills 1680 presentment Santan, dated 27 February 1681/2: . . . wee present Hugh Conory and Alis Calow because they sware in the parish of KK St Anne before a full congregation that they had no carnal deleing . . . and the above sd Hugh and Alis were maried. In ArW 1678A #23 Marown will of Bahie Kelly alias Cunnergy / Connery: The last will & testament of Bahee Cunnergy who departed this Life ye 15th of ffebruary 1678. Also, the same John with surname given differently: John Cundrie was one of the Chapter quest in Jurby 1628 & John Connery was a juror for Jurby 1631 & John Conner was a witness to the will of William Moughton will 1632A #025 Jurby, who is the same as the husband of Catharine Guenner / Cunnergy als Kelly als Kneale, ArW 1643A #40 Jurby: Item to my husband John Guenner half a yellow mayre of her own pte & di: cow. Another example is ArW 1679A #36 Jurby will of Averick Connery / Connelly died 9 November 1679 Jurby, recorded as 'Avericke Connery' in the will, and, in the Jurby parish register as Aurick Conley buried 9 November 1679

Or the surname Cunney / Quinney: ArWills 1694 Arbory Defuncts: dated 20 February 1694: 'X Ann Cunney', and her will ArW 1694A #09 Arbory will of Ann Quinney alias Cubbon: This is affirmed to be the last will & Testamt: of Ann Quinyee (als) Cubbon who was sick in body . .

Cosnahan is a name originally from Ireland that took many forms before is settled into 'Cosnahan', which is pronounced 'Cusnan'. The original name was 'cos-na-abhann (own), meaning 'foot of the river'. From the original name, various forms and spellings have occurred: Quishnaghan, Quislaban, Quosnaghan, Quisnoughan, Quistnough, Cosnoghnan, Coshegan, Cosnock, Costniough, Coshogan, Costoe, Cosnan, and Quislin (pronounced Cushlan), etc

Creetch: An example of guess-in-the-dark phonetic spelling, with the scribe not sure how to spell a name so he puts down every variation he can, shows up in ArW 1661A #073 Onchan will of Daniel Cannell. Witness to the will is Robert 'Creech', but as pledge his surname is spelled Robert 'Creets'. His wife, ArW 1663A #081 Onchan will of Margaret Cannell alias Creetch, shows the the spelling as 'Creech' and 'Creetch'. Creetch is an easy example. Others make no sense unless you know the Manx pronunciation, such as Kewn pronounced as Keone, and so spelled Kewn, Kewen, Keone and Keane, plus I suspect some other spellings. Then there is Cowin and Coane (same name), Kewley and Keolah / Keolih. Cotter which became Cottier is not pronounced as spelled, but is 'Cot-cher'.

Corteen: WW Gill, 1963, indicates that Corteen derives from MacMartin (1429, 1513). In the early 1600s, the family name was Quartine / Quarteene (Ewan Quarteene 1643 & William Quarteene 1691), and even Qurtine (Margaret Qurtine 1612). Other spellings include Corchine (MmW 1610M #41 Maughold will of Gilnoe Corteen / Quartine, 'Gilnowe Corchine', with son & executor recorded as 'William Corchynne', and as 'Willm Quartine' in the inventory), Conartine (Ar W 1619E #004 Maughold will of Christopher Conartine / Corteen, 'Christopher Conartine'), Cortine (Bahie ine Cortine 1606 & Christian Cortine 1633), Quartyne (Willm Quartyne, 1600), Quartene (Christopher Quartene 1602). Mostly, by the mid 1600s, the spelling Quartine had morphed into Corteen. WW Gill also indicates that Corteen and Cotteen are the same family. 'Stress has been shifted to last syllable, as in many Mx surnames', --WW Gill. The various spellings are under Corteen, with Quartine as a second listing when that is the name listed in the will.

Cotteen / Quatteen: Cotteen is not so common in the first third of the 1600s, but became more so as the century progressed. A land register records a Phinlo Quatteene and his son John Cotteen. In Phinlo's will, his surname is recorded as 'Cotteen' and 'Cottin': 'Ffynlo Cotteen' / 'Cottin' died 23 December 1644, ArW 1644A #15 Lonan, with children John & Jane & Catharine, brother 'Malony Cottin', and 1642[sic?] Liber Vastarum, Lonan: Phinlo 'Quatteene' / Cotteen was entered for a parcel of intack of 15d yearly rent, and he was dead so that his son John Cotteen was entered for it in 1642. 'Quatteene' and 'Quarteene' / 'Quartine' can easily be seen as the same surname, with a simple divergence to Cotteen and Corteen. I have listed Cotteen separately, and not under Corteen.

Costeen seems to be an entirely different family, though Leslie Quilliam, 1989, indicates the same derivation for both Costeen and Corteen. WW Gill, 1963, indicates the derivation from MacAlstyen, 1418, which became Calsten, 1601, which probably merged into the numerous early forms of Costain: MacAusteyn, MacCoisten, MacOsten, MacCostein; Costin, 1601, Cowesten, 1648; but, according to WW Gill, the principal line of Costain, however, derives from Austin. Costeen shows many different spellings in the wills and presentments that I have transcribed: Cowsten, Causten, Cowestyn, Costen, and even with an 'l' in the name: Caulstene ('Edmonde Calstene' was a juror 26 May 1608 chapter Court Maughold), and Calsten. Even Caistene crops up ('Willm Caistene' juror for Arbory per 8 February 1608/9 chapter court, and 'Wyllm Costen', the same man, was juror for Arbory per 20 August 1607). Also McCalsteyne (Robert McCalsteyne 1607 presentment). This Robert was presented several times between 1607 and 1611, with different surname spellings as follows:

Robert 'McCalsteyne' & Margaret Knickle presented 20 August 1607 Arbory ('McCalsteyne', see also Costeen & Causten) for fornication

Robert 'Caulstene' & Christian Kneen presented 22 October 1608 Lezayre for fornication, 'Robt Caulstene', see Causten & Costeen

Robert 'Causten' & Christian Kneen presented February 1608/9 Lezayre for fornication, note that Christian Kneen's name was crossed out, 'Robert Causten', see also Costeen

Robert 'Costen' & Christian Kneen presented 1 June 1610 Lezayre for fornication

Robert 'Costen' & Christian Kneen presented 18 January 1610/1 Lezayre for fornication

Robert 'Caulsten' & Christian Kneen presented 26 October 1611 Lezayre for fornication, 'Robt Caulsten', see also Causten & Costeen, 'Christian Knyne', see Kneen

By the late 1600s / early 1700s, this surname was morphing into Costean and Costain. All the various spellings are under Costeen, with some of the early years under alternative spellings of Causten and Caulsten.

Crellin is a surname where the 'l' sometimes becomes an 'n'. This is seen in EpW 1614E #029 Patrick will of Ellin Gell / Gall alias Crellin / Crennine. Ellin's maiden surname is recorded as 'Crenyn', brother Robert as 'Crennine' and 'Crellyn', sister Mally as 'Crennyne' and as 'Crellyn'. Other siblings left legacies are William Crennyne & Christian Crennyne. Chief supervisor is Thomas Crellyn. These are all recorded under 'Crellin', as well as Crennin Dougherdy / Deighertie / Dughertie and various other spellings are under Daugherty.

The surname Faragher is recorded under 'Fargher' (the more common surname), since at least sometimes, these surnames were used interchangeably; they were both originally Faracher or Farcher. Other early spelling forms of Fargher are 'Ffairchir' and 'Fyrchir'. An even earlier spelling is Chairchir. W.W.Gill in A Third Manx Scrapbook, 1963, indicates that Fargher derives from Fayrhare that became MacKarhare / MacCargher / Cargher, and in the 1500s, swung back to the original to become Fargher. In the early 1600s, Kairchir was not an uncommon form of Cargher / Fargher, giving us Fayrhare / Ffairchir / Fyrchir → McFarhare / McFarchir → Kairchir / Cargher → back to Fargher. If the 'ch' in Fairchir is enunciated gutterally in the back of the mouth rather than like the 'ch' in chair, you can see how similar Fairchir and Fargher are. The same enunciation of 'ch' can be seen in 'Churchie' which morphed into Curghey.

I have combined the surnames Gell, Gill, Geyl, Gall and Gale, all under Gell, since in various decades, a given family might use any one of the four spellings. Gall seem to have been a separate family until they adopted the more common surname family of Gell.

To complicate the Gill story is the fact that Gill and Killey were used interchangeably at one time. An example of this is Catharine Brew alias Killey, wife of Patrick Brew of Ballavarran, Jurby, who was buried under 'Killey', with her will (ArW 1722A #42 Jurby) repeating it. She had seven children, and with two, her maiden surname is 'Gill' when their christenings were recorded, with two others it is 'Kelly' and the rest show 'Killey'. Another is that of Marriad Trapp / Trape alias Killey, as she was recorded with her will ArW 1670A #100 Bride, but as Marriad Gell / Gill when she and Gilbert Trape were presented in February 1629/30, for fornication; she was pregnant and they married. Or Alice Gill / Killey the wife of Patrick Caine, recorded as 'Gill' with the christenings of her children, but as 'Killey' with her will (ArW 1670A #82 Ballaugh will of Alice Caine alias Killey, died 13 December 1670, husband Patrick Caine). And again, ArW 1654A #15 German will of Margaret Killey / Gill alias Crellin, with the surname of son Thomas recorded both as 'Killie' and 'Gill'. So if you have a Killey ancestor, be sure to check 'Gell' and 'Gill'. An earlier example is that of 'Donold Killey alias Gill' (that is, Donold Killey also known as Gill), of Lezayre, age 60, mentioned in the Court documents dated 18 October 1604, regarding the case of simony against Sir Nicholas Thompson, rector of Ballaugh 1590-1640.

The surname Garrett was 'Carrett' and 'Carrad' and Karrad' and 'Karyd', etc, in the 1600s and before.

Note that the surname Halsall was sometimes recorded as 'Halsey'. In ArW 1683A #07 Patrick will of John Shimmin, the witness and pledge is Thomas Halsall / Halsey; his surname is spelled both ways in the will. There are other examples scattered through the wills in the later 1600s.

If you are looking for your 'Hanton' relatives, be sure to look under 'Hampton', into which Hanton morphed.

Other Manx oddities: Juke and Jick and Gick and Duke are the same surname, with Juke (the most common form) & Jick finally settling into Duke and Gick in the late 1600s / early 1700s. Then there is the surname 'Inch' (also Ince), a Lancashire, England family, that often looks like 'Juch' [that is, Juke] when recorded, but seems to be only one family (James Inch & wife Ann Thomason, sons Henry [died 1697, married Catharine Corlett], Daniel [died 1724, married Alice Sayle], and Richard [an idiot]), that lived on the north side of the Island. On the south side of the Island, there are a Richard Juke and a Daniel Juke, which causes confusion with names when 'Inch' is read as 'Juch' and vice versa. The surname Juke became Duke in the late 1600s / early 1700s. Per W.W. Gill, in A Third Manx Scrapbook, 1963, the English surname 'Ince' became 'Inch' on the Isle of Man.

Kerroush / Kerrush / Kerroishe / etc, are under Kerruish.

I also came across a Keggeen / Caveen confusion. Margaret Shimmin alias Keggeen died 13 February 1694/5. In the will (ArW 1694A #21 Malew), she is recorded as 'Margaret Shymmin (als Keigeene)', with her husband 'Edw: Shymmin', and 'her brother William Keigeen' who was recorded as 'William Keiggeen' when listed as a pledge. Per my practice, I have listed her also under 'Kaighin'. Then I checked the Malew parish register and found the following:

Malew parish register: Margret Shimin als Caveen buried 20 February 1694/5

Malew parish register: Margret Caveen married Edward Shimmin on 14 July 1693 in Malew

Mostly, I have not seen this confusion with this surname, but more intense study may find that Keggeen and Caveen are used interchangeably. The surname Kaighin seems related to these other two surnames, with Keggeen and Caveen common in the south part of the Island, and Kaighin found in the north part of the Island, so check all three forms when tracking family across parish boundaries. While Caveen and Kaighin are found in the earliest Archdeacon Wills I transcribed, Keggeen first comes up in the 1660s.

The surname 'Caveen' is also used interchangeably with the surname 'Keneen'. An example of this is ArW 1668A #27 Arbory will of Joney Caveen alias Clague, dated 8 April 1669, where the family name is consistently recorded as 'Caveen', except at the end where pledges are recorded, and then the son 'John Caveen' is recorded as 'John Keneen'. The Caveen family is a small family, which may be because extended family are under other 'spellings'.

The surname Keneen has taken various spellings over the years, generally only modest variations of Keneen: Kynyn[e], Caneen, Kenen, etc.

The surname 'Keary' is a small family in the 1600s, and is difficult to tie together. AW Moore, in Manx Surnames, indicates that Keary / Kearey is a name of Manx origin, from O'Ciardha, and 'usually Anglicised to Carey', though no Carey appears in the 1600s. I could not find any name in the Manorial 1511-1515 record that even vaguely looked like either the original or derived name, so I wonder if it is a late-1500s / early 1600s transplant from Ireland.

AW Moore indicates that Kenaige, Keneagh, Kenagh, Kenag(?), as well as other similar spellings from the 1600s and before (a surname found mainly in German Parish) became Kennaugh by the 1700s (see page 27 of Manx Names). The surname Kinvig (page 49 of Moore) has no relationship to Kennaugh. Except in ArW 1661A #75 Malew will of Elizabeth Shimmin alias Kennaugh / Kinnage, the scribe recorded Elizabeth's surname as 'Kinnage' in her will, but as 'Kenvig' in the defunct listing, and her brother William is recorded as 'Kinvig' in his will (ArW 1668A #35 Malew). In the parish burial listing, she is Elizabeth Shymyn als Kenvig. And then there is ArW 1674A #32 German will of Elizabeth Kelly alias Quinney, where Philip Kenagh is a witness, Philip Kennagh is an appraiser, and Philip Kenny is a pledge; these are all the same person.

The surname Kewn / Kewen is pronounced 'Keone', and is sometimes recorded that way, or even as 'Keane'. An example is ArW 1689A #026 Malew will of William Quinney, where the witness and pledge are the same person, but written as 'Tho Kewn' for the witness and 'Tho Keone' for the pledge. Both are listed under 'Kewn'. 'Kewen' and 'Keane' are both found in ArW 1655A #03 Lezayre, where the surname of pledge John is recorded both ways

In ArW 1661A #009 Lezayre will of Robert Kewney, Robert's surname is recorded as Kewney (primarily) and Keney and Keeney. All three spellings were pronounced the same, Keone-ah.

In the ArW 1636A #059 Maughold will of Daniel / Donold Keig, the surname of John, who was to raise Don's son & who also gave security, is spelled both 'Kewney' and 'Keanih', with Kewney and perhaps Keanih pronounced Keōnah, or perhaps the second as Keahnah. Another 'Kew...' surname is Kewley, pronounced 'Keolah' per AW Moore. Sometimes, surnames are given the modern spelling by the scribe in the 1600s, sometimes a spelling that is more phonetic. Leslie Quilliam in Surnames of the Manks, 1996, indicates the following: Kenna = Kenah = Kennah = Kinnah = Keynney = Keaney = Kyney = Keney = Kennagh = Kinney. From the wills I have transcribed:

Keneh = Keeney: ArW 1656A #39 Andreas will of Christian Kenah / Kennaugh / Kinney, dated 2 August 1656: 'The last will & testament of Christian Keneh in manner &' but her names is recorded 'Christian Keeney' in the Defuncts for Andreas, Curia Tertia 28 Oct 1656.

Keanih = Kewney: In the ArW 1636A #059 Maughold will of Daniel / Donold Keig, the surname of John, who was to raise Don's son & who also gave security, is spelled both 'Kewney' and 'Keanih'; (Kewney pronounced Keōnah, and Keanih pronounced Keōnah or Keahnah)

Kenny = Kennagh: Episcopal will 1666-1669 Patrick, will of xxxx Kenny / Kennagh

Kenney = Kewney: William Kewney mentioned (he owed £2 9s & entered a claim for 30s also, surname recorded both as 'Kenney' and as 'Kewney') of Ewan Killip, will 1660A #22 Ballaugh

Keenye = Kewney ['Keen' in Keenye is pronounced Keōn & 'Kewney' is pronounced Keōnah]: William Kenny / Kewney mentioned (surname recorded as 'Keenye' & 'Kewney', testator admitted he owed William £2 9s, & William entered a claim for 30s) of Ewan Killip, will 1660A #22 Ballaugh

Keney = Kenney = Keeney: ArW 1653A #41 Lezayre will of Averick Keeney / Kewney alias Gill / Killey, 'Avericke Keeney alias Gill' & 'Kenney' & 'Keney', died 12 June 1653, intestate: husband William Kewney / Keeney, son William, son John, dau Ann & dau Mally, brother John Gell, pledge: Daniel / Donold Kneale of Ramsey, also, debts owed to: William Christian walker, Ann Kewney, John Kneale, Patrick Kneale, William Corlett

Keney = Keeney = Kewney: Robert Kenney will 1661A #099 Lezayre, died 13 March 1662/3, wife is not mentioned, NOTE, that Robert's surname is recorded as Kewney (primarily) and Keney and Keeney

Kenney = Kenagh = Kennagh: Philip Kenney witness [note, Philip's surname is recorded as 'Kenagh' & 'Kennagh' & 'Kenny'] to will & pledge to the inventoried goods of Elizabeth Kelly alias Quinney will 1674A #32 German Kneen / Creen: AW Moore also indicates that the surname Kneen was sometimes pronounced Creen, and written that way. An example of this is the 1679 Episcopal Will of Christian Callow alias Creene of Maughold. The Maughold parish register lists her as Christian Callow als Kneene buried 2 April 1679. Or ArW 1701A #80 Lezayre will of William Creen, died 31 January 1701/2 (children John & Edmund & Margaret & Ellinor & Jane & William Creen); but Maughold parish register: William Kneen buried 1 February 1701/2. Moore also indicates that Creen probably has a different derivation from Kneen, and so is a distinct family from Kneen; however, I believe this 2nd statement is less true than the first. Just one more confusion.

The surname Knickle was generally written Knackle in the 1600s, with an even older form of Knickle being 'Knagyll'.

During much of the 1600s, the Manx form Kinry and the English form Harrison were used interchangeably, so both surnames need to be searched.

Regarding Kneale & Nelson, it seems that 'Nelson' was more commonly in Rushen Parish, and 'Kneale' more common in other parishes. I suspect that Nelson was sometimes the same family as Kneale (with the Kneale family anglicizing their name perhaps for political / economic reasons), and sometimes the surname of an English immigrant family.

Lucas is seen in the 1600s, but mostly after the first two decades, the family name is recorded as Clucas (from MacLucas).

In the early to mid 1600s, the family Lace was found primarily in one area of the Island, and the family Leece in another. Some have commented that Lace and Leece are the same family, being pronounced and spelled differently because of the different accents in the different parishes where the family lived. Supporting this supposition is the following: Archdeacon Will 1741/2 #130 German will of Dorothy Crellin als Leece, died 25 December 1741: She was recorded as Dorothy Crellin als Lace in 1772 addendum when a child received his legacy, yet her father was named as John Leece in the same memorandum. Archdeacon Will 1709/10 #6 German will of Ellinor Leece als Kaighin, died about 15 October 1709, mentioned her husband John Leece who signed his name John Lace. Then there is Charles Lace who died about 1667 / 1668, ArW 1667A #23 Bride, and a note dated 28 February 1668/9, records his name as 'Charles Laece'. 'John Lace' was a witness to the will of Edmund Kelly ArW 1642A #60 Andreas, and also an appraiser of the inventory, where his name was recorded as 'John Leece'. A last example, the undated will of Margaret Leece alias Cross, ArW 1628A #32 German, wife of deceased John Leece, children Ann & Margaret & William & Philip & Isabel Leece, that includes a claim by Isabel Lace, who is probably the daughter Isabel Leece. There are other examples in the Wills, so maybe Lace and Leece are the same family.

Moughton / Mughton / Moghton are under Moughton.

In the 1600s, the surname Mylcraine took on several spellings: Macylcarane, Mcylcarraine, Mollicharaine. Mcylcarran and Mcilcarran are also seen, which I have indexed both as Mylcraine and Carran.

The surname Oates seems to have originated from a Scandinavian Viking by the name of Otts / Oates, who settled on the Isle of Man about 900AD - 1000AD. His children would have carried the 'surname' of McOtts and McOtt (found in 1418 records), before losing the 'Mc' and becoming just Otts / Oats / Oates. Oates continued also as a given name for some 600 years before dying out.

The male line of the Oates family stems from Scandinavia, arriving on the Isle of Man around 900AD to 1000AD. Presumably, the first of the line carried the given name of Oates, continuing as a given name for over 600 years, as well as slipping into surname as a designation of the 'Oates' family clan. (Genetically, the Caine & Keig & Oates families are closely related and may share a common ancestor from the time of 900-1000AD, perhaps from a male Viking who settled on Man a thousand years ago and had these three sons, Otts/ Oates, Cathan / Caine & Taidgh / Keig. Caine derives from Mac Cathain, 'Cathan's son', meaning 'warrior', deriving from cath, 'a battle'. Keig derives from Mac Taidgh, 'Tadg's son'. Its meaning seems to be 'poet'.)

Quiddy became Cuddy, and Charry became Curry. Except, to add to your confusion, I found the following: In a claim found in ArW 1677A #053 Malew will of Christopher Bell, Amy / Emmy Corrin was married to deceased William Coerry [or Curry], but ArW 1673A #29 Malew of Catharine Moore alias Corrin (sister of Amy) records William as 'William Cuddie' and his daughter as 'Ellin Quiddie'. The parish burial listings for Amy and William are under Cuddy / Cuddie. Then there is ArW 1678A #24 Santan will of Philip Brew, whose wife is Margaret Curry / Cuddy; both surnames are used, though her brother is only Edward Curry, including in the parish register burial listing. One last example is Nicholas Quiddy who was presented 4 February 1643/4 Malew, for fornication with Jane Fargher, and for behaving in a 'most vyle' manner, as well as for threatening the congregation while in church; but on 7 February 1643/4, in a follow-up of the presentation, he had become 'Nich Curry'. Quirry / Quirrey also seems to have become Curry

Queeling and Quillin seem to be the same surname: Braddan parish register lists John Quillin buried 17 July 1729, but his will in the Episcopal books lists him as 'John Queeling'

MacQuarres became Quarres, which AW Moore indicates morphed into Quarry, but it seems, at least in Patrick & German parishes in the early 1600s, to have morphed into 'Corrash' / Corris. See: ArW 1633A #54 Patrick will of Peter Dawson, dated 29 March 1634: . . . Item to Sr William Cosnahan 1 mutton, & if he take & recever from Patricke Corrash & Jony Cross 20s wch was due to me & my wife as I shall answere at the day of Judgement; and ArW 1628A #30 German will of John Cross, made 8 May 1628: Item, I constitute & ordayne my sonn in law & his wyffe my daughter my true & lawfull executors of all my goods moveable and unmoveable . . . ye above sayd son in law viz: Pat Quarres & his wiffe Jony are sworne to bringe in a true Inventory . . . The sayd Pat & his wiffe have disobeyed & . . . Also, the 16 Manorial Roll 1633-1654 Peel German cottages, lists Dollin Quarres and Michel Whitehead for a house in 1640, and by 1642 & later, Dollin Corres & Michel Whitehead, as well as Dollin Quarres & the executors of John Quarres, with the surname morphing in the same time period to Dollin Corres / Corris & executors of John Corres / Corris. And 1649 Liber Vastarum land records of Patrick: John Quarres was entered for a quarterland in Ballamore but 'the said John Corres' sold the rent to Sir John Harrison clerk for a parcel of meadow ground.

Coark and Quark are the same, and became Quirk, which was actually a separate family from the Quark family in the 1600s. I also have a listing for Quork, which may be Quark before it became Quirk.

Quine is a simple surname, its spellings all making sense, mostly Quyne and Quine. However, in EpW 1614E #028 Patrick will of Ellin Lewin who died November 1613, the surname Quine is spelled 'Queene'.

The surname Rancroft is the same as Ranscroft and appears to have morphed from Ravenscroft: ArW 1666A #34 German will of Hugh Rancroft, where his surname is given as 'Rancroft'. German parish register: Hugh Ranscroft buried 13 March 1666/7. And from land records: 1654 Liber Vastarum, German: John Ravenscroft & Margaret Hunter had a kiln & garden of 3d yearly rent, . . . and 1654 Liber Vastarum, German: Hugh Ravenscroft had a parcel of intack land of 2d yearly rent & sold it to John Corris. . . Finally, 1660 Liber Vastarum, German: Mungo Hartley had farmland of 1 1/2d rent in Ballatersin treen and sold 1/2d rent to Isabel Sherlock who was now dead and her executors sold it to Hugh Ranscroft who was entered for the 1/2d rent in 1660

Steane / Stephen: In the 1660s, Steane became Stewan and also Stephen and Steven during the same time period. In ArW 1697A #29 Ballaugh will of Thomas Killip, the surname of his executor Patrick is recorded at 'Stewan', 'Stephen' and 'Stean', all in the same will.

Taubman: Taman / Tumman and Tunman are under Taubman (see Court notes dated November 1613, found immediately after EpW 1610E #021 will of Jeffrey Gallowaye, when 'Tubman' and 'Taman' / 'Tamman' refer to the same person.

Watterson: The surname Watterson was originally MacWater (the son of Water). The 'c' slurred into the 'water' and the 'm' was dropped, so that it became Quattere / Quater. In the 1600s, it was gradually Anglicized to Watterson. In 12 February 1633/4 presentment / chapter court Patrick in the Archdeacon Wills, William McWatere is a juror. In 1631, William Quatereh died (ArW 1631A #025 Patrick). Alice Watterson / Quatereh alias Callin died in 1651 (ArW 1651A #04 Patrick), the will proper records her married surname as 'Quatereh', but as 'Waterson' in an attached note dated 2 April 1652.

Watterson: Then there is the following family: William Watterson died 1653 (ArW 1653A #04 Patrick) with a son Phinlo and daughter Joney who married John Kermod. (His wife, Alice Quatereh alias Callin died 1651/2, ArW 1651A #04 Patrick.) When daughter Joney Kermod alias Watterson died in 1663 (ArW 1663A #101 Patrick), she indicates that her brother is Phinlo Cotteere, which would be easy to assume it to be Phinlo Cottier. However, I think the scribe was trying to record the old Manx form of Watterson. A Phinlo Watterson died in 1670, EpW 1670E #054 Patrick, naming among others his brother Patrick Watterson, and daughter Isabel Watterson. Phinlo's wife, Ann Watterson alias Gell, died 1663, ArW 1661A #113 Patrick, and lists all the same children, including daughter 'Isabel Cotter', another example of a confusion with the old Manx surname Quattere. Then there is the Episcopal will of 'Margaret Watterson alias Taylor' per her inventory, or 'Margaret Taylor alias Cotter' per her will (Episcopal will books 1659-1666 Rushen); I believe this is a 3rd instance that 'Watterson / Quattere' is the correct surname, and not Cotter. And the ArW 1678A #43 German will of Thomas Crellin lists the surname of his first wife Alice as 'Cotiere' and in added notes as 'Watterson', with her brother being John Watterson; her will is ArW 1678A #44 German, & also in Episcopal wills, of Alice Crellin alias Watterson.

I came across the will from 1636, of William Mcyllchoobright / Mcylchoobright / Mcylchoobright alias Broad (ArW 1636A #113 German). Was the family also known as 'Broad', or was just Willam sometimes called William Broad? Parish records of the 1600s dropped the 'Mcyll' when recording deaths, leaving 'Coobright' / Choobright and 'Couberagh' / Coobragh, with Margaret the last such, buried 1671. Then, in Patrick Parish, Joney Broade, the only Broad in the early burial records, was buried 13 July 1678. Was she once Joney Coobragh? Joney Coobragh was the aunt of Mallooney McylChoobright / Coobragh, his will ArW 1660A #44 Lezayre. And Joney Coobragh was a witness in the 2 August 1670 presentment Maughold of Margaret Corteen, in the Archdeacon Wills.

Then there is the example of 'McLowney Coobright', as he was listed in the 1660 defuncts of Lezayre Parish, dated 11 February 1659. In his will, ArW 1660A #44 Lezayre, he is recorded Maloynny MacYlchoobright, but the Old Typed Index records him as Malowny McYlechriist which may mean the indexer 'knew' MacYlchoobright morphed into Mychreest, or the indexer misread the name. Choobright is shortened from Mcyllchoobright / Mcylchoobright / Mcylchoobright alias Broad for this small family in Lezayre Parish in the early 1600s. The 'alias Broad' is an interesting hint. If 'Choobright' is pronounced with accent on the second syllable, then it becomes easy to see how 'Broad' was derived from it.

WW Gill, 1963, however, posits that Coobragh may have morphed into Cooper. He indicates that MacGilcobraght / Mac Ylcobrough is from the Gaelic form of St Cuthbert (the English form).

Another 'alias' family is Lawrenson alias Wilson (that is, Lawrenson also known as Wilson). The Episcopal will of William from the 1620s is listed this way, as is appraisor Thomas from 1637 in the Archdeacon Wills. William's wife, Margaret Joyner, died 1636, lists her grandchildren, the children of Thomas, as Jane & Alice 'Lawrence'. It seems that the family was officially recorded as 'Lawrenson' in the first half of the 1600s, and by the last third of the 1600s, it had become 'Wilson'. Why the family was popularly known by both names in the 1600s, only to finally settle on Wilson is a mystery.

As I said previously, before 1700, names, both given and surnames were fluid and changeable, so puzzles like those above may show up in your family. Others can be discovered in books by AW Moore and Leslie Quilliam and WW Gill and Gill & Kneen.

Other Housekeeping

I have used modern spellings for the parishes (Andrews / Andrewes = Andreas, Malue = Malew, Mahold / Machold = Maughold, etc.). Through most of the 1600s, Lezayre was written as 'Leyayre', or 'Ley Ayre' or even as 'the Ayre' (see ArW 1667A #12).

Place names and their spellings might be obvious to a Manxman, but not to me when the penmanship is poor or odd; I have spent tens of minutes comparing the presumed spellings of places with Arthur William Moore's and George Broderick's books of place names; sometimes these were helpful, sometimes not.

There are Latin words I have stumbled over, especially when the penmanship was poor; someone who knows Latin needs to correct my guesses.

A couple of Latin phrases seen over and over again are: Salvo tamen vincui, suo jure. 'Suo jure' means 'in one's own right'. 'Salvo tamen vincui' means, as I have pieced it, 'excepting all previous bonds of union', or, in other words, if there is a previous contract (of marriage or anything else) or if the land is 'entailed', then that previous contract takes precedence over the will's probate. Vincui seems to come from vinculum, meaning bond or union, a tie. 'Vinc' is the stem of 'vinculum' and 'vincus' is an obsolete form. It also references an entailed inheritance, which could not be divided up in a will, regardless of the testator's wishes. 'Salvo' means 'excepting, saving, without prejudice to some previous right'.

The Latin word 'coram' is used commonly in various instances. It means 'before, in the presence of', such as 'coram Reverenda in Christo Johanne Sodor . . .', that is, before (or, in the presence of) the Reverend in Christ John Sodor . . .

The end of most wills contains the phrase 'probatum est et solvit', that is 'this is proved and resolved / cleared up / discharged'. When the Court made a 'decree', because the testator was under the age of 14 or because the testator died (usually suddenly) without a will, the words 'decretu / decretum est et solvit' are seen, that is 'this is decreed and resolved / cleared up / discharged'. 'Probatum est' is Latin for 'it has been proved or tested'. -- Oxford English Dictionary

Another phrase is 'plena ecclesia', meaning a full congregation of the church. People were expected to confess their sin or 'fault' and ask forgiveness in 'plena ecclesia', that is, before a full congregation at church.

Purgavermit or purgaverment (I had difficulty deciding which, since the last syllable was often 'slurred' over, distorting the letters between 'm' and 't') is a common word found when two people are accused in court of fornication or some other sin / error / fault: 'Purga' is from the Latin 'purgare', meaning to purge. Thus, the meaning 'to clear (oneself or another, one's character, etc.) of a charge of suspicion of guilt; to establish the innocence of; to exculpate; sec. in Law, by assertion on oath, with the support of compurgators'. -- Oxford English Dictionary. A compurgator is a friend who vouches for your character, etc.

The Latin incarcerare, to imprison, had become 'ad carcerem' (to prison) or 'in carcerem' or 'in carceria' on the Isle of Man in the 1600s and before, often shortened to 'carc:' or 'ad carc:'. Being sent to St German's prison (basically a dungeon with dim lighting from a few small windows lighting the common area) was not so very uncommon, with people being sent for a few days, or a couple of weeks, or '40 days', or until they agreed to repent in front of the congregation. It is interesting that offences, such as breaking the Sabbath which could land you in prison, would be shrugged off in court if they were justified. (See EpWills, Michael Chapter Court dated 28 October 1614, where Thomas Croghan / Crawhan could not justify why he broke the Sabbath.

'Ut supra' meaning 'as above' is not uncommonly seen so that the scribe does not have to repeat the 3 or 4 lines previously written on the page.

Sometimes there is the always sad entry in chapter court of a presentment of an unmarried woman who was pregnant and then, next to the presentment, is written the word 'mortua', or 'dead'. It would seem that she died in childbirth.

For those like me who do not know what a firlet / firloft, barrell, bowl / boll, or pottle is: According to the Oxford English Dictionary, boll 'is entirely a northern word' seen in Scotland and northern England. It is a 'measuring of capacity for grain, etc . . . containing in Scotland generally six imperial bushels', which was the same in northern England in the 1600s. 'Also a measure of weight, containing for flour 10 stone (= 140 pounds [of flour])'. In the 1600s, a boll of salt was 2 bushels. Also, in the 1800s, wheat was sold by the 'old boll of 48 gallons' in some parts of northern England; the 'new boll' used in other areas was 16 gallons. The Oxford English Dictionary indicates that a firlet / firloft was a 'fourth lot' or fourth part, so a firlet was 'the forth of a boll'. A pottle is a 'measure for capacity of liquids (also for corn and other dry goods, rarely for butter) equal to two quarts or half a gallon'. Per ArW 1658A #70: There are 10 pottles to a barrell. Translated for the Isle of Man, a boule / bowl / boll a corn / grain was 250 pounds, and a firlet of corn / grain was half that, or about 125 pounds.

Comment about the costs of 'corn': By the late 1660s, barley was priced at 5 shilling per bowl / boll, oats at 2 shilling per bowl boll, rye at 4 shilling per bowl / boll, and peas at 4d (4 pence) per pottle. Per ArW 1665A #021 German will of Catharine Moore alias Billings, the price of a bowl / boll of malt was 6s (6 shilling).

A hogshead, per the Oxford English Dictionary, is 1) A large cask for liquids, etc, specl one of a definite capacity, which varied for different liquids and commodities, 2) Such a caskful of liquor: a liquid measure containine 63 old wine-gallons (equal to 52 ½ Imperial gallons)

Adding a little perspective to the economy of the 1600s, in 1684 (per ArW 1684A #005 Braddan will of Robert Coultry), you could buy 12 bars of soap for 4s (ArW 1637A #37 Braddan will of Mary Vinch alias Corkill, lists 6 pounds of soap for 2 shilling), a goat for 1s (ArW 1683A #56 Lezayre of Daniel Kinread), and a sheep for 1s or a blanket for 2s (ArW 1683A #50 German of William Cowley). With a bar of soap costing comparatively so much, I suspect people did not bathe with soap very often. Per ArW 1684A #52 Braddan will of Averick Craine, a maid servant was paid 6s 6d for a year of work. In ArW 1696A #14 Jurby will of Thomas Kelly, he indicates that a pair of sheets is equal in price to a chest (4s 6d) plus a petticoat and apron (2s) plus a pair of shoes. Based on the inventories of various wills, people seemed to be better off economically in the early 1600s, compared to the mid 1600s & later, based on everything, including the fee for probating the wills, costing more.

The inventory of Jeffrey Galloway, a merchant with a shop in Castletown, EpW 1610E #021 Malew, lists the costs of goods in his shop in 1610 that the better off would buy: a pair of silk garters cost 8 shillings but a pair of crewel garters was only 2 shillings 3 pence, statute lace cost a penny a yard, a pair of spurs was 3 pence, velvet lace was 4 pence per yard, tufted white fustian cloth was 13 pence per yard, medley cloth cost 20 pence for a half yard, two whale-bone bodices for women cost 4 shillings 8 pence, a yard of black russett cloth or of bluish medley cloth was 5 shillings 8 pence per yard, a 9 ounce hank of silk (unwoven silk) was 18 shillings, several arrow heads cost 12 pence, a dozen knives cost 3 shillings, a pair of stockings cost 20 pence, nine pounds of prunes cost 12 pence, etc. Fustian is 1) a strong cotton and linen fabric used for clothing and bedding, and 2) a class of cotton fabric having a pile face or twill weave, such as corduroys and velveteen which belong to a group of filling-faced fabrics. (Merriam-Webster dictionary) The 'tuffed white fustian cloth' mentioned above would fit into the second definition. Medley cloth is a varicolored cloth of wool dyed in the raw, that is, died before it is spun into yarn / thread. A pair of shoes cost 2 shillings, a trencher (a wooden platter for serving food, common in most households, they also seemed to be used as eating plates) cost 3 pence, treen vessels (a bowl or other utensil made of wood), etc. There is also in the inventory a long list of household items with the appraisal cost listed. A shive, mentioned in the household list, was either a thin wooden bung for casks or a thin flat cork for stopping a wife-mouthed bottle. Three shives plus a jug and a riddle cost 12 pence. A riddle was a coarse sieve or strainer, used on the Isle of Man, perhaps, to strain 'middlings' (medium sized particles / by products of ground grain) from flour. Pillowbeers are listed here & frequently in other wills; it is a covering for a pillow, basically a pillowcase. A bolster is a long pillow or cushion that usually extends across the bed and is placed under the pillow and often under the sheets. These definitions come from the Miriam Webster dictionary. Three similar items: a coverlet is a bed covering with a fancy pattern woven into it; a blanket is a plain bed covering; and a fledge is another bed covering perhaps similar to a modern day comforter or quilt, & perhaps with feathers / down (the 'fledge' of a bird). Finally, there is caddow, which is a rough woollen covering (Oxford English Dictionary). Five stones of feathers (70 pounds) cost 16 shillings 8 pence. Eight boules / bolls of malt were 48 shillings.

A heckle, not infrequently listed in an inventory, is a wicked looking instrument, with many nails driven in rows through a board, used to comb flax, removing the retted woody part (called 'breaking') and straightening the flax fibers prior to spinning it into a thread. The board dimensions might be 6" x 8" or larger, and ¾" thick, with a handle extension. Growing flax for linen was common on the Isle of Man (a two year process: first, you have to grow the flax, then 'retting' it for weeks to months by leaving it water to rott off the woody part, which leaves behind the filamentous 'thread' that is gathered and combed, spun, and finally woven into cloth). A fancy heckle from the 1840s that I own has 3 rows (often there are more) of 4" hand forged nails driven threw the wood and a metal plate, with 22 nails in each outside row and 9 in the inside row, in a space of 1" x 4 ¾". 'Wheels' in a will refers to spinning wheels: typically, a large wheel (a person would stand beside it) was used to spin wool, and a small wheel (a person would sit to use it) for spinning flax into linen, but I have used my modern small spinning wheel for spinning both wool and linen. ArW 1695A #72 Andreas will of Daniel Quane makes that differentiation clear. Some may have been too poor to own a wheel, and instead have used a 'drop spindle' though I have never seen one mentioned; perhaps they were too crude and easily made / broken so that they were not thought worthy of passing on to another. You will see 'linsey-woolsey' cloth mentioned not infrequently; this is cloth made of both flax / linen yarn and wool yarn, with linen used as the warp and the wool as the cross thread / woof. People in the United States like to pretend that linsey-woolsey cloth was their invention, a necessity that occurred when there was a wool embargo by England in the 1700s, putting wool in short supply. But the Manx were making linsey-woolsey in the 1600s, and maybe long before.

Almost every cottager had a linen and / or woollen spinning wheel; when the women of the household had spun enough, they took it to the weaver who wove cloth for their clothing or for blankets and coverlets. Linen wheels were 'small'. Often, woollen wheels were so large that the woman stood beside it while spinning. I do not know why they were different sizes. I have spun both flax and wool on the same modern small spinning wheel with no difficulty.

The first mention of eye glasses ('a pair of Spectacles with silver hoops') that I came across was in the ArW 1697A #24 Jurby will of Captain Patrick Christian of Ballameanagh. His will also mentions 2 looking glasses, one of the earliest mentionings of mirrors.

The word 'friend', as used on the Isle of Man during this time, often depicted some type of relationship.

'Natural' generally meant 'mentally disabled', or 'intellectually / mentally retarded', and did not mean illegitimate as we sometimes think of the term.

I found the following from the book What the Dog Saw, by Malcolm Gladwell, talking about the fertility of Mali tribal women in the 1980s, which gives an idea of fertility in our agrarian ancestresses: "[A] woman on average has her first period at the age of sixteen and gives birth eight or nine times. . . . [and] from the age of twenty to the age of thirty-four, she spends so much time either pregnant or breast-feeding. . . . Then, from the age of thirty-five until menopause, at around fifty, . . . her fertility rapidly declines". In the 1600s, our Manx ancestress generally did not marry until the early to mid 20s, and then had her first child in about a year, with the next child in a couple of years. An example of this: a 1685 Petition of Catharine Cannell alias Cannell wife of Philip Cannell of Douglas indicates that she had been married 8 years and was the mother of 3 children & had a child recently die of smallpox; the petition was in regards to Catharine being slandered by Mary Kermeeen, who said Catharine was the whore of Thomas Kinread. Catharine Cannell and Philip Cannell married 20 May 1677 in Michael Parish; Catharine would have been in her early to mid 20s when she married. (Christening dates of their children: Christian on 8 September 1678 Braddan, John on 13 February 1680/1 Braddan (buried 7 April 1685 Braddan), Catharine on 16 September 1683 Braddan, Thomas on 16 May 1686 Braddan, & Philip on 10 Feb 1688/9 Braddan, father Philip of Douglas.

Dying in childbirth was common. Over a woman's child bearing life, she had a 30% chance of dying in childbirth. People on the Isle of Man lived on the edge of not enough, so if there were an orphan that someone had to take in, that person required that the orphan pay for room and board using the inheritance received from deceased parents. Kinship made no difference in this regard. In fact, a child was rarely taken in by a non-relative; it was too much of a hardship.

A comment on the designation 'orphan': To us, it means a child without mother or father. More frequently than not among the Manx of the 1600s, it merely meant that one of the parents was dead, not both, and that the person was still not of legal age. An example is the will of Philip Corlett (ArW 1657A #46 Lezayre), who is termed an 'orphan', with his mother (Bahie Corlett alias Fayle) having a will in 1655 (ArW 1655A #46 Lezayre). The 1657 defuncts of Lezayre indicates that Philip, son of John Corlett, died before 17 October 1657. Bahie's will, in a note dated 7 November 1665, indicates that Bahie's husband was still alive, along with son William. It is likely that Philip died when about 5 years old, and his older brother would have been 14 or older in November 1665 (born about 1651 or before) but still not 21, when he received his legacy and placed it in his father's hands.

Until the mid 1700's, most children died young, so that while a woman might have 10 children, there averaged only 5 people in a household, the parents (one may have been a step-parent) and three children. Any infection could kill and often did. Cholera was rampant. While history states that smallpox was not a problem until it was brought back to the Island by William Killey from abroad (England), thus giving it the Manks label of 'Brack-Willy Killy', and that the first person recorded to have died from small pox was Jane Corlet in 1685 (see Memorials of 'God's Acre', by John Feltham, 1797, in Lezayre Parish), still it was seen on the Island before that. The following was found in a 1650 presentment: ArWill 1650 Braddan presentment: Examinations taken at a Court houlden in KK -----[Braddan]-[fold] Church ye 5th Augt: 1650: Tho: Cowin sworne & examined sayth yt Ellin Cowley sayd yt Margery Quaile came to her husbands bedside & yt he left the chamber to her ye sd Margery & further this depont: sayth yt ye sd Ellin Cowley sd shee wondered wt was become of Margery Quaile for shee was wont to come to her brother John] Cowley his bed but came not in since h[is] children had the smale poxe, & yt her brother ----[torn] her he would ever purge for the sd Marge[ry] Quaile. Tho: Cowin

Smallpox broke out every 15 to 20 years, with a 10% to 15% death rate under the best of times. Cholera was common, with several in a family falling ill and dying in short order, as well as spreading to the greater community. Pneumonia under the best of times had a 50% mortality. Dropsy occurred from heart disease, kidney disease, and who knew what else. Foxglove leaves, which contain digitalis, can control edema from congestive heart failure, but the level of digitalis in a leaf is inconsistent, so you probably died sooner instead of later anyway. Cancer also occurred, leading to death in a year or two. Strep throat, easily cured these days with an antibiotic, killed in the past by becoming systemic and leading to kidney failure. (In 1837, Samuel Taggart and wife Mary Colquit buried seven of their ten children in a six week period due to 'scarletina', a systemic form of strep infection.) Deadly accidents also occurred, including the loss of a boat full of men during herring fishing, or failing to cross a rushing spring stream, or falling from the rocks when searching for something (sheep, a plant for healing, etc).

The Court proceedings started by the Episcopal Wills 1605 Petition of Elizabeth Moore alias Moore suggests that Elizabeth probably had a stroke not long before the petition. In the petition, she accuses her husband of selling off all his and her goods and keeping the money for himself and abusing her with his tongue, etc. Testimony indicates that she & her husband Sir Robert Moore vicar of Santan (appointed 1597) had a good marriage and 'lived together lovinglie', and when she became sick, he tended her 'verie carefull', 'to doe her what good he might.' She was ill for several weeks. After she recovered, she had changed, wishing evil on her husband, calling him a dog & a thief, saying he ought to be hanged. A change in personality like this can happen when a stroke damages certain parts of the brain.

Dementia from old age also occurred. Deemster George Stanley's first wife died leaving him with several underage children, and he married his second wife Jane Stevenson about 1601 (they already had a daughter Elizabeth by early 1604, per EpW 1604E #035 Arbory will of Alice Stevenson alias Prescott, Jane's mother). George was probably born about 1576 (age 23 at marriage, 3 or 4 underage children born over a 10 year period of time, another year before his second marriage in about 1601, when he would have been about 35, making his birth date about 1576). When he died in 1635, he would have been about 70 years old, and he was declared 'not compos mentis', with questionable memory, and easily disturbed and disquieted.

Henry Lesquire / Squire is another example of dementia: Henry Lesquire / Squire married his first wife Ann Christian before 1668 (per will of Ann's sister Isabel Stevenson alias Christian, ArW 1668A #23 Arbory), and they had at least two children, a daughter Jane who married xxxx Meredith and son Richard, neither of whom were present when his will was probated in 1716 (Episcopal Will, Malew Parish). Ann died in 1684 (Episcopal Will), and Henry remarried the widow Elizabeth Cottier on 13 September 1685 in Malew Parish. (Elizabeth had married George Stowell / Stole about 1667, per christening of their first child Ellin in January 1667/8 Malew. George died December 1682, EpW 1682A #11 Malew.) Elizabeth would have been about 22 when she married, thus born about 1645, and since Henry had been also married firstly about 1667, he was probably born about the same time. Thus, when Henry died in 1716, he was about 71 years old, when witnesses declared him 'non compos mentis', not mentally competent to make a will. My conclusion, as with George Stanley, is that he was suffering from dementia of old age.

A further comment about dementia. The above two examples were well-to-do men. They would frequently eat on pewter plates (which was high in lead content back then) and drink from crystal glasses, also high in lead. Alcohol left in crystal glass will leach the lead out of the glass and into the alcohol. Brain damage from lead in the young growing brain is a topic of concern in our society. But lead can also cause brain damage in an adult brain. Lead plus age and perhaps also excess alcohol consumption because they were rich enough to afford it would be a triple whammy on the brain. There may also have been other habits of the privileged upper class that are questionable from a health standpoint.

Our ancestors were not above drinking too much. In the Episcopal Will 1605E #038 German will of Catharine Lyman, she indicated that when she was in town, she made a will before the priest and clerk, but now, back home, she told two neighbors that she had drunk so much ale at that time that she could not remember what she said, so she wanted the two neighbors to be witness to a new will.

The cost of health care has always been expensive, it seems. In 1697, Robert Quay paid 3s 4d for a prescription (which had questionable efficacy), at a time when half a beef cost 4s, a coffin was 7s, 3 horses were 15s, a sheep was 1s 2d, and yearly rent of a nice house (in 1710) was 17 and a half pence. In 1600, Thomas Cross the younger, who had been sick for a year, had Peter Vance over for a 'cure', which cost him 5 shillings (see EpW 1600E #009 German), and the nurse who cared for him for a year was paid 8s.

It is not uncommon to see a spouse die soon after or within a couple of years of the death of the mate. I suspect that occurred because, with nutrition problematical, a person's immune system did not work well, so if your spouse became ill, you probably would also. And if your spouse became ill, you had the work of two people on your shoulders, be it the farm or the family garden or the children, or anything. No one can keep that up, so you would quickly wear out, and then nutrition became more of a problem.

Every once in a while, there is a picture of a grieving father wrapping his little child in a scrap of cloth and quietly burying the child in the church graveyard at night, because he could not afford the cost of a formal church funeral, where, at the very least, the parish priest, clerk and grave digger had to be paid. If caught or reported on by a neighbor, he was censured and fined.

Every once in a while you will come across the word 'crossed', particularly in the presentments. This does not mean that the entry was a mistake and so crossed out, but rather that the person performed his or her penance and / or paid the required fine, and so his / her name is now crossed out. Fines were often collected 'ad usum domini', that is, for the use of the Lord of Man (its 'king') and often went to the parish priest for needy folk or the repair of the church and church grounds. Generally, 'families' (people in, perhaps, a treen or a smaller area who may or may not be related) were assigned various repairs of the church and grounds, and would be fined if they did not do it.

There was little lumber / few trees on the Isle of Man in the 1500s and 1600s and 1700s, until Bishop Wilson made a concerted effort to replant trees cut down decades and centuries previously for heat, etc. Therefore, when people were buried, they were not buried in coffins, for there was no wood for them. Instead, linen 'winding sheets', which were wrapped tightly around the person, were used in place of a coffin. Per ArW 1683A #27 Lezayre will of William Kissage, his brother Hugh bought and used 4 ½ yards of linen for William's burial, at a cost of over 4s, at a time when a feather bed cost 2s 6d, a table & frame cost 5s, and a bowl / boll of wheat (either 140 pounds or 6 bushels) cost 5s.

Horses are frequently mentioned in wills. Native Manx horses were small and hardy, fit for riding and ploughing. Six horses made up a team (often owned by two families) that could till 30 acres of land. By the mid to late 1600s, oxen were being imported and cross bred with native cattle for ploughing. The short thick-bodied Manx cow produced 12 quarts of milk daily for 3 months after calving, a fourth to a third the production of today's cow. The milk was high in fat, and the resulting butter was an important export item and 'cash crop' for the family. Sometimes, cheese was made. Native Loughtan sheep provided meat and a buff colored wool, which sold for less than the white wool of English sheep, which were imported in the mid to late 1600s. (ArW 1690A #43 Arbory will of Joney Gell alias Costeen and the will inventory ArW 1691A #13 Malew will of Mr John Barry, specifically mentioned white wool.) A Loughtan sheep could produce 2 ½ pounds of wool yearly. Sheep often roamed freely, but everyone knew which were his or hers. Many people kept one or two pigs, which were slaughtered when 10 to 12 months old. Geese were also kept by some in the 1600s, and became more common later. A few people kept bees.

Purrs were also left in legacy. Per the Oxford English Dictionary, a purr is the name of a wild pig formerly found on the Isle of Man.

I read somewhere that the Manx people used their sheep for wool, meat and milk. Milking a sheep seemed far fetched to me until I read ArW 1691A #49 Braddan will of Margaret Clague alias Kelly, where she leaves to her husband William 'half a dozen sheep, between milk sheep, and dry', and ArW 1651A #30 Lezayre will of William Crowe who left milk sheep & their lambs & wool to his underage son. (William had 110 sheep stock, including 24 muttons, 28 'other' sheep, 18 hogs, 10 other sheep & hogs, & the milk sheep. Also EpW 1606E #050 Ballaugh will of Marriad Quayle alias Moore (copy of will, EpW 1606E #095 Ballaugh), where the inventory records 2 milk sheep and 7 other sheep. In miscellaneous Manx Wills, 1633 Andreas chapter court / presentments, 'Katherin Carrett [was presented] for [falsely] sayeing to Katherine Cowlle that she took the mylke from her ewe bye sorcerie'.

Barley (for bread and beer) and oats (a large part of most peoples diet in the 1600s) were important grains for food, as was rye, with wheat less so. 'Corn' is a generic word for these grains. In 1800, an acre of land produced 60 to 70 stooks of corn. In the 1600s, an acre of land would have produced less than this with lean times common before 'modern' farming practices took hold in the 1700s. Also in the 1600s, the Little Ice Age still held sway, only slowly releasing its grip in the late 1700s, so that finally in 1850, the Thames River in London did not freeze for the first time in centuries. So summers were sometimes too cold for much of a harvest. Once in a while, a will mentions peas being grown, especially in the north. Five reapers and one binder could cut an acre of average corn (wheat or rye or barley or oats) in a day, producing between 60 and 70 stooks of wheat. A stook of wheat equaled 10 sheaves; a stook of barley or oats was 12 sheaves. As mentioned earlier, a bowl / boll a corn / grain was 250 pounds, and a firlet of corn / grain was half that, or about 125 pounds. The word 'firlet' derives from 'fourth', so at one time, a firlet was a fourth of some larger measure.

A comment on the difference in the marital distribution of goods on the Island. The women on the south side of the Island owned half of all that the family accumulated rather than a third as was the custom on the north side, because, one day, when being invaded again and when the number of defending men was very small on the southside, the women stood shoulder to shoulder with the men, wielding shovels and sticks and axes as they helped defend the Island. They still lost to the better equipped invaders, but the men decided from that time on that, as reward for their bravery, their wives would own half the marital goods and lands, equal to the man's, instead of a third. You will also notice that Manx women borrowed and lent money and engaged in business just as the men did, whether they were northside women or southside.

The men fished the herring grounds in season (starting in mid July, mostly in waters around the Isle of Man, sometimes ranging as far as Scottish or Irish waters) since that was their biggest cash crop, and some never returned. After tilling and sewing the fields, many of the men and older boys fished for 3 months while the women took care of things at home, including weeding the crop & harvesting it. This necessity made the Isle of Man a fairly egalitarian society, especially for that time. Women bought and sold in their own right, be they married or not. The only difference I have seen in the way men and women were treated on the Isle of Man is in punishment: Women pregnant with illegitimate children might have to do penance and beg forgiveness of the congregation at church three Sundays, while the father of the child might have to beg forgiveness 4 Sundays and spend a couple of days in prison.

During the weeks of herring fishing, when so many of the men left for to fish for weeks at a time, the women took over everything else, from business to farming to anything legal that needed doing, on top of raising the family. Consequently, women spoke up as equals wherever they were. One woman was accused in church by the vicar of being a witch, and her husband turned to her and said, "Honey, won't you renounce your ways?" She spoke up boldly and forthrightly and said, "I have never been any such thing. Whoever says so is spreading evil gossip. I have nothing to renounce because I am not a witch." The vicar and everyone else considered the matter settled.

Before the modern era, it was paramount that a woman marry. If she did not, she risked mind-numbing poverty. An example of this is Mabel Croghan, who was at least 20 years old when her mother died in 1654 (see ArW 1654A #23 Michael will of Ellin Croghan alias Callow). Mabel was left 2 sheep and 8 shillings in legacy, a decent legacy at that time. On the Isle of Man, a woman could engage in business in her own right, be she married or single. A woman, though, because of her lesser strength and stamina, could not make the same wages that a male farm laborer could make, and this became more of a problem as she aged. When Mabel died in late 1691 / early 1692, she was a pauper, with nothing to her name. The same would happen with men, but it was more common with women. To be financially successful often took two people working together. When people became too old to farm their land or even work in their garden, it was not uncommon for them to sell their land, 'out of necessity', so that they had money for their support.

Population of the Isle of Man

Over a period of 60 years, approximately 5000 Archdeacon wills / decrees were recorded and subsequently transcribed by myself. The Episcopal wills from 1600 to 1700 contain over twice that number, making about 13,000 wills of mostly adults. Putting this in context of the population of the Isle of Man, per the 2000 website of Frances Coakley:

In 616 AD when Edwin King of Northumberland ravaged Man, there were 300 family and about 1500 to 2000 people.

In 730, according to Bede, there were 300 to 400 families (or as many as 2700 people).

Blundell in the 1640s estimated a population of 6000 to 7000.

Browne Willis in 'Survey, 1727: Diocese of Man,' in Book on the Cathedrals of England, 1727, indicated 'The number of souls in this small district [of the Isle of Man] are about 13,840, and of houses or families about 4000'

Bishop Wilson indicated in the early 1700s that the population was about 14,400, broken down as follows and compared to 50 years later when the clergy returned a census:

	Early 1700s	1757		Early 1700s	1757		Early 1700s	1757		Early 1700s	1757
Malew & Castletown	2035	2381	Andreas	967	1067	Michael	645	826	Santon	376	507
Braddan & Douglas	1590	2935	Rushen	813	1007	Bride	612	629	Onchan	370	434
Lezayre	1309	1481	Ballaugh	806	773	Lonan	547	869
German & Peel	985	1730	Patrick	745	954	Marown (1700 est.)	499	658
Maughold & Ramsey	985	1641	Arbory	661	785	Jurby	483	467	Total	14,426	19,144

From AW Moore, Manx Names, page 193, which is a quote from Manx Note Book, Vol XII, p. 175, Moore indicates the Viking conquerors divided the Isle of Mann into six Sheadings, based the population. Each Sheading was required to provide four crew (average crew would be forty men) of men between the ages of 20 and 60, to man a Viking long ship. Thus, the 24 crew levied and required from the Isle of Man population would be about 1000 men, between 20 and 60 years of age, suggesting a total population of four or five thousand around 1000 AD to 1300 AD.

Every once in a while, oaths were taken of the oldest parishioners during disputes of tithes and other things. In the Episcopal Wills, is found a letter dated 12 July 1604, by Sir Edward Moore, indicating he took the oaths of 4 men, the 'most ancient in the parish' of Braddan, John Creer, Thomas Quine, John Christian, and Gilbert Casement, all of whom were above the age of 80. In the Episcopal Wills, three notes dated 22 May 1613, regarding the tithe of Ballavroye / Ballabrooie in Lezaye, owned in 1613 by Philip Garrett, 'the ancientest now alive on the northsyde this Isle of Man part of us being of the age of an hundred years and above, and the youngest of us three score and odd' testified that the tithe of Ballabrooie was always 20s; 15 men signed with their mark or (3 of them) their signature. These people were Thomas Skillicorn, John Crowe senior, William Quayle, William Casement, John Kinread, Phinlo Kneen, Henry Caley, Gilbert Kinread, Ewan Caley, William Corlett senior, David Crenilt, Gilbert Standish, Robert Garrett, Duncan Christian, & parson William Crowe. Parson Crowe was at least 65 (he had been proctor of kk Lezayre for 45 years) and probably closer to 75, and he died in 1627, fourteen years later, age 79 to 89 or more (which is his more probably age).

People fought hard to survive and live, and quietly accepted death as a frequent part of life. It took both parents to successfully raise children, both working hard to provide for them. Too frequently, if one parent died, one or two or more of the young children would soon follow. If the remaining parent quickly remarried, the children stood a chance of surviving.

Though it was customary when a person died to leave the poor a legacy of food, there were some years when few left anything. Reading between the lines paints a bleak picture of families not having enough even for themselves. Two entries show this poverty: 1st, Archdeacon Wills 1668/9 presentment Onchan of Margaret Scarff for carrying a bag of meal on her back on Sunday, no punishment was given because 'this was in great necessitie to relieve poore children'. (A person was not punished for an offence, in this case breaking the Sabbath, if it could be justified, taking food to the poor.) 2nd, in a 1675 note ?Bride Parish, Ann Kneale had died, and her next of kin, a woman named Ann, was extremely poor and unable to clothe herself, so money was given to Ann out of the Inventory for clothing, note dated 11 September 1675, in the Archdeacon Wills. By the late 1600s, people started to have a little more food and a little more money, per their wills, but still struggled so that their legacies to the poor were modest compared to the early 1600s.

By 1800, total population was around 29,000, by mid 1800s, it was 53,400, and in 1891, 55,600, and April 1986, the population totaled 64,282. In the early 1700s, the mini ice age which started in the early 1300s (perhaps triggered by, or maybe just added to by, a massive volcanic eruption in Indonesia in 1257 that spewed 4 cubic miles of ash 27 miles into the air, blanketing the earth and leading to several years of cooling and mass starvation worldwide), began lessening to the point where by 1850, the Thames River in London did not freeze over for the first time in centuries. Between that and poor farming techniques, famine was too common including through the 1600s, as was infectious disease, which kept the population stable at a low number. (The mini ice age starting in early 1300 plus the bubonic plague of 1348-1350 decimated world wide populations to half previous levels. Though the plague never reached the Isle of Man, the ice age did. Before the 1320s, the population of the Isle of Man was probably over 10,000. By 1400, it was maybe half that. In the 1600s, starvation of neighbors is sometimes mentioned in the Church Courts, with relief voted and given.

In the 1800s, because of emigration, population growth again slowed.

Politics, Governance and Land in the 1600s

1572-1593: Sir Henry Stanley, 4th Earl of Derby, 1531-1593, was Lord of Man and the Isles. He visited the Island in 1592

1593-1594: Sir Ferdinando Stanley, 5th Earl of Derby, c.1559-1594, was Lord of Man. He was poisoned by one of his domestics. On his death, the title to the Island was disputed between the daughters of Ferdinando and his brother William, 6th Earl of Derby. At the probable request of Alice Spencer, widow of Earl Ferdinando and of his brother William, Queen Elizabeth governed the Island, passing it to King James I at her death.

1594-1609: The English Queen Elizabeth, & then King James I governed the Isle of Man

1609- 1642: King James of England granted Sir William Stanley, 6th Earl of Derby, c.1561-1642, the lordship of Man; his wife was Elizabeth seemed to govern the Isle of Man, with Sir William taking no interest. She died 1627, & her son assumed the lordship

1627-1651: Sir James Stanley, 7th Earl of Derby, 1607-1651, was 10th Lord of Man. He tried to make Man a feudal system so that the people no longer owned their land. He was beheaded by Cromwell. His wife Charlotte planned to sell Man to Cromwell's Parliament in return for her husband's life, but was stopped. (Besides which, Cromwell had no intention of ransoming any royalist.)

1651-1660: Cromwell took over Man and gave it to Lord Fairfax. With the defeat of Cromwell, Man returned to the Stanleys. (The transition for the Isle of Man to the Commonwealth of 1651-1660 was a peaceful one. Sir James Earl of Derby had bled the Island dry in the Royalist cause, so the people weren't particularly upset with Cromwell and his changes. They weren't good times but could have been worse for the common small farmer.)

1660-1672: Sir Charles Stanley 8th Earl of Derby, son of the beheaded Sir James, regained title to the Isle of Man.

1672-1702: Sir William Stanley 9th Earl of Derby, became Lord of Man. Bishop Wilson negotiated with him to restore the ancient land tenure, which was the basis of the Act of Settlement. All his children died, so his brother Sir James inherited the Isle of Man in 1702.

Governor or Lieutenant Governor or Captain (called various titles but doing the same thing) and appointed by lord of the Island. He acted as chancellor, and was responsible for all the civil and military officers. He was also the last appeal in matters of right and wrong before the lord.

Government positions that had to do with making sure the Lord of Man got all the taxes that had been assessed

Attorney General, acted in behalf of the lord of Man in civil and criminal cases to make sure no one infringed on the rights of the lord

Comptroller: in charge of the Lord's revenue and did the auditing of books. He was also the Clerk of the Rolls.

Custom / Customer: someone who collected custom duties

Water Bailiff: in charge of custom duties of the import and export trade

Receiver: collected the taxes, rents, etc. The moar of each parish usually helped him

Deemster: a judge who presided over criminal and civil cases. There were two, one from the north side of the Island, and the other from the south. They presided over Tynwald Court. Generally, it was a life job. Since the Deemster had to speak Manx, a Manxman was elected to it. A Deemster took the following oath of office: "You shall do justice between man and man, as equally as the herring-bone lies between the two sides."

Lord Bishop: involved in both church and civil governance. A bishop of Man (there was only one at a time) was the same as a baron in the rest of England, and he held his own court along with the vicars general (two). The archdeacon was under the bishop and also held his own court. The bishop's ecclesiastical court alternated with the archdeacon's court, with one or the other of the courts held quarterly. The Bishop was also referred to as 'the ordinary', sometimes capitalized, though sometimes 'the ordinary' seems to refer to local parish priests. An example of this that makes it clear that the bishop is being referred in the presentment & court trial of Joney Christian alias Taggart, wife of Philip Christian, of Lonan, in August 1630, for the charge of witchcraft & sorcery (she was cleared of the charge) in miscellaneous Manx Wills: 'in regard they [the jury] had no due competent proofes to testyfie anye thinge material against her: provyded that they have further referd the foresayd Jonye to ye religious disposeinge & judicious censure of ye Right Reverend ye Ordinarie'. Or the presentment 3 September 1604 Malew of James Heyes (in miscellaneous Manx Wills): 'Phillipp Leighe Chancellor Required the sayd waterbalyffe, that ether the deputie beinge then prsente mighte discharge the office or to put in sureties, or to pcur a Letter from the ordinarie'. Or EpW 1613E #003 Malew will of John Mylrea: 'Sr Watsonne and his wyfe to bringe in a true Inventorie . . . due unto the sayd Mc ylrea at the cominge & returninge of our ordinarie into this Isle'. Or EpWills 17 May 1602 Castletown presentments: '. . . at the ordinaries [Ordinary's] discretion or his vicr generall', &, in the same presentments, Sir Thomas Fargher (vicar of Malew) was suspended 'by the ordinarie' for 6 months, both which clearly refer to the bishop. In a letter dated 21 February 1605/6, written by William Crowe officer / vicar of Lonan / vicar general, Sir William refers to 'My ordinarie the lord byshop . . .' (This letter is found after EpW 1605E #068 Arbory will of Joney Maddrell alias Caulsten / Causten / Costeen alias Clague.)

Archdeacon: judged all controversies that arose in wills. Wills were proved in Archdeacon Court two quarters of the year, and in Episcopal / Bishop's Court the other two quarters, alternating the quarters.

Vicars General: There were two, one appointed to the north side of the Island, the other to the south. Wills were proved in Ecclesiastical / Bishop's Court run by the Vicars General two quarters of the year, trading off with the Archdeacons.

Sumner: Among other duties, he made sure people appeared in court or paid their fines when they were suppose to. If they didn't, he was often authorized to drag the person to prison, often getting a soldier from Peel garrison to help him.

Mooar: Each parish had its mooar who was the lord's bailiff. (Mooar in Manx means 'big.' Beg or veg means 'little.') He enforced the judgments of Court (the coroner eventually took this over) and collected rents and revenues (fines) for the lord. The mooar was rotated among the owners of each quarterland.

Captain of the Parish: Originated with the Norse. It was his responsibility to organize a watch, day and night, for any marauders or other danger coming by sea. He called two men from the parish to do this. He was entrusted with the parish militia.

Locksman: Collected fines and administered punishments. The name comes from the Norse lokus-veinn, meaning 'jailer.'

Coroner: The 17 parishes were divided into 6 'sheadings,' each with a coroner who acted as sheriff: They enforced the judgments of Court plus other duties. The coroner kept the peace of his district, secured criminals, brought them to justice, etc. Originally, leading land owners held this position, and they sometimes abused the power of this position.

Clergy: Per William Harrison, in Diocese of Sodor and Man, 1879, in his Preface: In former days it was the custom to call vicars of parishes 'Sir'. Rectors or part=sons were named 'Mr.' Blackstone says: 'A parson (persona ecclesiae) is one that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called parson, because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented; and he is himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the rights of the church which he represents by a perpetual succession. Com. b. 1, c.11 Vicars were the parish priests. There were usually 17 of them, though sometimes a vicar was parish priest for two parishes at the same time, especially if one of them were small (had few inhabitants) and thus was poor. Their job included both ecclesiastical (church) and governmental duties.

Also regarding the clergy, it seems that there were several acting as ministers in the various parishes, and addressed as 'Sir' xxxx, who were not officially appointed to serve in a given parish. Examples: Sir John Corkill was acting as a minister / curate / etc in 1600, etc, but was not appointed as a vicar until 1606, when he was made vicar of Rushen. John Clague acted as a minister in Arbory in around 1577, though there is no appointment recorded for him in An Account of the Diocese of Sodor and Man by William Harrison. John Clark was acting as a vicar in Jurby in 1600, though he was not appointed until 1603. Daniel Corkill ('Sr Daniel Corkill') was a minister in Malew in 1600 & 1601, though there is no mention of him in An Account of the Diocese of Sodor and Man. Another such is Philip Crenilt ('Phillip Crynilt ministr') who was minister / curate of Andreas from 1630 - 1651, and also functioned in Maughold in 1636, but is not mentioned in William Harrison's record. And Thomas Fargher, minister of Malew from at least 1601 to 1608. Also Sir William Leece, vicar of Michael, died about December 1602, his will ArW 1602E #055 Michael. Refer to the Master Index for other examples of ministers, curates, vicars, &c.

Also to note, an apparitor was appointed in every parish to help the vicar / rector / minister with his duties, especially those pertaining to the court.

House of Keys: arose from the ancient open air Tynwald Court that started in the period of Norse rule. It contained 24 people. Originally, 8 were chosen from the outer isles and 16 from Man (one from each of the original 16 parishes). When, in 1266, Scotland wrested the outer isles from Norse rule, the missing 8 were made up by electing 4 members from each of the 6 sheadings of Man. Originally, the members of the House of Keys was elected by the people, then they were self elected (the members of the Keys decided who would join them when someone retired or died), and finally became elected by the people again. Wilson states that the twenty-four keys of the House of Keys were called that because they unlocked, as it were, or solved the difficulties of the law.

Tynwald Court: begun by the Vikings in about 980. Tynwald comes from the Danish word ting, that is, 'a court of justice, and vollr or wald, that is, 'fenced;' it was held on a hill near the middle of the island, and in the open air "for the protection of public liberty, and jealously guarded to prevent any infringement of their prerogatives." (Manx Society Journal volume IV, VII, IX). Tynwald Court was originally an annual gathering of King, nobles and commoners at which fealty was pledged. Before long, it was a yearly gathering where people could air grievances and have them judged, as well as to hear new laws before they were enacted. Tynwald Court was held in open air "for the protection of public liberty, and jealously guarded to prevent any infringement of their prerogatives." (Manx Society Journal volume IV, VII, IX). From the mound, laws were publicized, giving people a chance to challenge and disagree with the proposed law. After publication, if disagreement was not great, the law was enacted. In 1417, the first Stanley as king of Man ordered that the 'breast laws' (oral laws; breast refers to the Deemster's conscience used when judging) be written down, both old ones and new ones proclaimed from Tynwald hill. In these courts, both plaintiff and defendant presented their own suits, with men and women having equal opportunity to bring suit. Whatever the finding and judgment of the court, it was final and binding. The date for Tynwald Court eventually became set for late June or early July, before the men left for herring fishing. From it evolved the House of Keys and the Legislative Council that meet now in Douglas. By 1511 if not before, Tynwald Court was permanently held in St John's village, on a man-made hill by the church of St John's. The hill, called Cronk-y-Keeillown [literally, hill church], was made from dirt brought from each of the 17 parishes of the Island, indicating the unity of the whole and nearness of the parishes to each other.

The Council is sometimes mentioned. During the 1600s, it contained 9 members: Governor, Bishop, Archdeacon, two Vicars-general, the Receiver-general, the Comptroller, the Water-bailiff, and the Attorney-general.

A chapter court was held every three months, under the aegis of the Archdeacons or of the Bishop (they traded off, every other 3 months), where people were presented for inappropriate behavior (adultery, fornication, working on the Sabbath, fighting especially on the Sabbath, cursing, speaking ill of and towards neighbors, gossiping, bearing false witness, etc) and for the proving / probating of wills. Generally, four jurors were assigned from each parish to hear the presentments and the wills. The jurors may have those positions for a few months or for several years.

Very occasionally, if a Manx man or woman were unhappy with the lord's decision, they would appeal to the king of England. The reasoning was thus: Though, in the 1600s, the king of England had no authority on the Isle of Man, the Lord / King of Man was a subject of the king of England, so the Manx people appealed to the Lord of Man's superior Everyone was expected to go to church every Sunday. Anyone caught 'working' on Sunday or a Holy Day was 'presented' in chapter court and either reprimanded or punished in some way. Any type of physical fighting (especially if blood were drawn), cursing, spreading lies and gossip were all 'presented' in court. If people didn't do their duty, they were presented in court.

St German's prison is frequently mentioned in presentments. It is a dank dungeon with little light and no sanitation facilities. Those guilty of disobedience, incest, adultery and a host of other things would be sent there. People seldom spent more than a week or two in it, though once in a while a desperate petition can be read from someone who could not arrange for bondsmen, who guaranteed the person's behavior and also guaranteed the payment of the fine if the person slipped up again, and so had been in prison for several weeks.

Regarding the land: Originally, treens were large tracts of lands that clans staked out as their own. When the Vikings conquered Man, they named these tracts 'treens'. By 1511, there were 158 treens. Treens were usually divided into quarter lands, that is, into four farms that were called balleys (Norse for 'homestead' or 'farm'). (An interesting example of a treen being divided into 4 farms is Ars Rogane treen in Santan Parish: In 1515, both Ballafurt and Ballacrine were considered 'half' quarterlands, with 3 other farms considered a full quarterland each, even though the acreage of Ballafurt & Ballacrine were about the same as 2 other quarterlands in the same treen. There are other such examples.) Quarterlands ranged from 50 to 180 acres, though most were around 90 acres in 1511. By the 1600s, many quarterlands had been divided into smaller units to accommodate farms for children or to sell when the family needed money. Intacks were waste land outside the treens. Originally, it was common pasturage, but by the 1600s, a 'right' to use it had occurred and this 'right' was passed down in the family. In the late 1600s and the 1700s, boggy intacks were drained for better use. Originally, the Manx owned their land, but conquering kings changed that, and the Manx instead 'rented' their land from the king. In the 1600s, as well as before and after, land was not 'bought' as we know it, but the right of rent was bought.

When a landlord transferred or leased property, he put a piece of wood and some straw into the hands of the new tenant, who accepted it and returned it, in this manner making a binding contract. (Thus, the laws of tenure – of residency and possession of land – were called ‘the tenure of the straw.’)

The Isle of Man was so named more than two thousand years ago. Caesar, in his Gaelic Wars of 54 B.C., referred to Man as ‘Mona,’ the Latinized form of Man. Pliny in A.D. 23 also referred to Mona, and made it clear by description that Mona was Man. Bishop Wilson, though, stated the name was derived from the Saxon word mang (among), so the people were called Manck-men, etc., but the name predates the Saxon invasion of the Island. Others have suggested it came from a word meaning ‘isolated’ or ‘apart.’ Irish scholars now suggest that the names Man and Mannanan are linked with water, meaning ‘at water’s edge.’

Some Last Comments

We often think that the problems we see in modern life are unique to us, and caused by the hectic and fragmented lives we live. However, careful reading of the wills and presentments show otherwise.

Our ancestors had marital problems, just as we have, with one spouse causing strife and sorrow for the other spouse. Deemster George Stanley died in 1635, ArW 1635A #05 Arbory. Shortly before his death, in the presence of Sir Robert Norris, he asked his wife Jane Stevenson (who was his second wife and 20 to 25 years his junior) to take care of the youngest child, and she replied she would take care of all of them (for she wanted the use of all their goods) or none of them (she seems to have had minimal maternal feelings). The response of George to this was: ‘woe is me’ . . . ‘there is no mortal man able to give this woman content’, ‘whereupon he wept’.

Per ArW 1667A #45 Malew will of Margaret Cubbon alias Radcliffe died in childbirth on 4 January 1667/8. Ellin Vaughn alias Caldicook / Cook had recently delivered a child of her own and Margaret asked her to wet nurse her own newborn baby. I expect she did, but on 9 March 1667/8, we read in the Malew parish register that Ellin was buried after killing herself. As a psychiatrist, I conclude that Ellin suffered from severe post-partum depression.

Amelia Huddleston alias Christian, wife of Captain Thomas Huddleston, also killed herself (‘cut her own throat’) two and a half months after giving birth to her sixth child, and buried in the Chancel the next night, on 28 August 1689. (Her mother Mrs Dorothy Christian alias Wilson of Milntown, mentions Amelia’s son, Thomas Huddlestone, in her will ArW 1694A #51 Lezayre.)

The clergy and people of the Isle of Man did not consider suicide an automatic prohibition to a church burial and grave. The burial of Thomas Christian of Douglas, on 16 March 1783, makes this clear: He had been ‘for some time indisposed’ when he cut his own throat, but was ‘acquitted by a jury as insane’, so ‘his corps was interred in the Church Yard.’

Then there is Sir John Gell, 1761-1845, the only son of Sir Samuel Gell, vicar of Lonan. At 16, he became an apprentice seaman for 5 years, suffering several captures and imprisonments by Spanish privateers. Because of these experiences, he left his apprenticeship early (his master agreed to release him), and he studied for the ministry, holding several positions, each for a few years before resigning. He married, but had no children. Mr Harrison, who knew him personally, commented that his early life ‘unsettled him and rendered him rather unfit for the ministry’. Again as a psychiatrist, I conclude that he suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder.

In 1613, at an episcopal wills chapter court about 29 March 1613 held at St Peters, German, Joney Kelly alias Moore was declared ‘lunatic’. Her husband William Kelly of Santan was to take care of her, keeping her clean and safe and making sure she did not endanger herself or others. His brother Thomas Kelly & a ?brother (probably) / ?son / ?nephew William Kelly junior both bound themselves financially to make sure that he did so. On 25 October 1614, the court declared that she had her perfect senses and was restored Wife abuse occurred and was dealt with harshly (weeks in a dungeon prison plus monetary fines plus confession before neighbors at church and begging forgiveness of the person injured), as did child abuse and neglect (similar punishments). Couples would separate, only to be told by the court and church to live together again or face censure.

Sometimes, a husband or wife would abandon his / her spouse and children, running to Ireland or England, and never be heard from again. Divorce occurred because of abandonment and abuse.

Homicide was not common on the Isle of Man but did occur. The punishment was death of the perpetrators. In 1606, William Moore was purposely violently struck on the head by another man, so that afterwards he could not talk and ‘in all mens judgments’ he was also ‘thought to be senseless,’ and he died after not very many days (probably from a fractured skull and subdural hemorrhage). (His will brought up some legal questions: Can a dumb man make a will, especially if he is thought to be senseless, that is, without sense or understanding?) Witnesses at his will making said that he could hear, and he understood what was said to him, responding to question by ‘signing’ with his hands, so the will was allowed to stand, and the decree that the Church made was rescinded.

People starved to death in quiet desperation, though the parish priest tried to keep track of who needed help in his parish. People dying from slowly debilitating illness would make the dangerous passage in small boats to Ireland, trying to defy death and seeking a cure at the blessed wells of ancient saints. No where did I read that a cure occurred. The rich could afford a doctor who did little but look wise; the poor depended on the largess of friends, which often was not forthcoming. Then, just as now, months of illness and inability to work would deplete all resources, leaving a person in desperate financial straits.

The Manx were a generous people, and when they died, they left something for the poor, even if they themselves were poor and could leave but a bushel of oat meal. But some years, will after will after will made no mention of the poor. Reading between the lines paints a bleak picture of families not having enough even for themselves during these times.

Then there is the following that re-inforces my faith in mankind: In EpW 1670E #092 Maughold will of Mally Corteen alias Christian, we find the following legacies:

Inprmis to Ewan Kneale yt hath ye fallinge sicknes 1s; It: to ux: Marrian Cowle blynde 1s; It: to Margt: Crosse blynde 1s; It: to poore foole of Donald Key to helpe to buy him a coat 1s; It: to poore old uxur Kneale almost blynd 1s; It: to ux: Nyghlaughy, who hath many poore fatherless children 1s; It: to the poore Dumble wench in ye westend of prish 1s;

In those days, a shilling was a lot of money. Per ArW 1673A #21 Rushen will of John Costeen, his eldest son Daniel is 'something foolish' so his mother [John's wife] took custody of his legacy, which meant taking care of Daniel the rest of his life. In ArW 1677A #084 Maughold will of Robert Kerruish, Robert indicates his brother John needed life-long supervision, which was first indicated in their father's will, ArW 1675A #027 Maughold will of Robert Kerruish senior. Robert junior assumed that task until he died. Or the admonishment of a dying father to his son to look after his 'aged and decrepit' sister. The son replied that he always had, and would continue to do so in the future, see ArW 1687A #47 Maughold will of John Corteen. Or the spinster Isabel Garrett (ArW 1695A #20 Michael) who, in failing health in her 50s, was taken care of by a non-relative Joney Kelly alias Quayle alias Harrison / Kinry, who had a new baby, plus a 3 year old, a 7 year old, and 3 others under age of 18, by the time Isabel died.

Finally

Before sending the Wills to the printer, I reviewed them, comparing them against the microfilmed original, catching and fixing typos, spellings, and deciphering words I could not make out at originally but were clearer to me after thousands of hours of study, also indexing more people, clarifying index entries, and other housekeeping. I would like to believe that the resulting Wills are perfect, but I know they are not. Hopefully, the remaining errors will not adversely affect your research. As I wrote previously, if you have questions when studying a will, refer to the microfilmed originals, which are available at the Manx Museum on the Isle of Man and through the Church of Jesus Christ of Latterday Saints (LDS) Family History centers, and many of them, if not all of them by the time you read this, are digitized on the LDS internet site, at familysearch.org/search/catalogue.

I started my transcriptions with the Archdeacon Wills (ArW). When I started transcribing the Episcopal Wills (EpW), I found several errors. Then, in 2017, George Callow from Alberta, Canada, wrote me of a website containing images from previously unfiled wills, found on Manxmanorialroll.com. The records, housed in the Manx Museum in Douglas, Isle of Man, were filmed by Robert, who created the website. These wills are labeled as MmW.

Correction: Carter Woods alias Woods died about April / May 1670, with her will found amongst the 1670 Archdeacon Wills but was actually an Episcopal Will (EpW 1670E #026 Santan). Based on the evidence I had, I recorded her as Carter Woods alias Moore. But then I found her marriage contract to Thomas Woods of Balladoole which indicated her maiden name was Woods, and she was the daughter of John Woods of Ballyrie (EpW 1618E #012 Malew).

Correction: ArW 1658A #096 Lezayre will of Christian Callow alias Kerruish, who husband Duncan Callow was her second husband, her first husband being xxxx Corkill, and all of her children being the children of her first marriage. So the will is actually that of Christian Callow alias Corkill alias Kerruish. Christian's mother was Joney Kerruish alias Corkill, EpW 1608E #038, and Christian was married when her mother died.

Correction: In Archdeacon Will (ArW) 1633A #022 Malew will of Clement Quiggin alias Mylrea, I listed Clement's 'sister' as 'Alice Mylrea', when she was actually her sister in law, Alice Mylrea alias Bell, married to Thomas Mylrea. This was corrected by Episcopal Will (EpW) 1606E #038 Malew will of Ann / Annas Mylrea alias Quane

Correction: In Archdeacon Will (ArW) 1628A #56 Ballaugh will of Nicholas Quackin, I indicated that his mother married first Daniel / Donold Mylrea and then xxxx Quackin. However, his mother, Averick Cry, per her will in the Episcopal books, married first John Quackin, and second, Daniel / Donold Mylrea, who was alive when she died.

Correction: In ArW 1638A #15 Lezayre will of Catharine Kneale alias Cowle, I indicated that her stepmother or 'mother in law' (per will, two different women are recorded as her still-alive 'mother in law', which probably indicates that one of them is a stepmother) was 'Anne Kinnie'. However, after finding Manx Manorial will / Manx Museum will MmW 1610M #37 Bride will of Philip Kimmey, and then reviewing the microfilm copy of Catharine's will, I realized Catharine's mother in law / stepmother was 'Annas Kimmey'.

Correction: Catharine 'Haugh' was mentioned as dead in a letter dated 15 May 1631 by vicar general William Norris, as dead in a 1631 Patrick presentment, as dead in a note dated 15 May 1631 (that was with letters dated from 26 March 1631 through March 1631/2, and as dead in a 1631 presentment Michael, all in the Archdeacon Wills. I originally recorded her surname as 'Hangh' / Haine, but in the miscellaneous Manx Wills, her surname is clearly written 'Haugh', which may also be the same as Hogg, under which she is also now listed.

Correction / addition: The Archdeacon Will 1645A #17 Ballaugh of Elizabeth Coraige did not give the surname of her husband (who was not mentioned) or of her three children, so I recorded her married surname as 'xxxx'. Upon finding the will of her sister Joney Kinley alias Coraige (MmW 1633M #03 Ballaugh), I discovered the surname of Elizabeth's husband & children, and it is Cannell.

Correction: With the will of Gilbert Clucas, ArW 1635A #06 Marown, I indicated that his wife was alive. This turns out to be his 2nd wife, the first being Marriad Kelly, who died 30 October 1634, who died 14 months before him, her will MmW 1634M #15 Marown

Correction: The will ArW 1650A #12 German is of Isabel Taubman / Tunman alias Garrett alias Barrow / Burrough. However, in other records, she is recorded as Elizabeth Barrow / Borrow. Therefore, I added the given name 'Elizabeth' to Isabel's will.

Correction: In ArW 1636A #017 Arbory will of Mrs Catharine Hall alias Stevenson, died 28 September 1636, intestate, I recorded her name as Catharine Hall alias Heyes alias Stevenson, thinking that the Catharine Stevenson that Mr James Heyes water bailiff married secondly was the Catharine who then married xxxx Hall. James Heyes died 1607, EpW 1608E #001 Malew, and the Catharine Stevenson he married was a generation older than Catharine Hall alias Stevenson. Catharine's mother, Catharine Allen, was the 3rd wife of John Stevenson of Balladoole, who was the father of Catharine Hall alias Stevenson (her paternal half-sister was Jane Stanley alias Stevenson, dau of John Stevenson of Balladoole & Alice Prescott).

Correction: ArW 1638A #28 Braddan will of Daniel / Donold Cowley, buried 8 November 1638: 2nd wife Catharine was listed as Catharine Caine, and she should be recorded as Catharine Creer. She died 21 October 1606, EpW 1606E #064 Braddan, with her inventory recorded in a later court, EpW 1608E #090 Braddan.

THE COSNAHANS OF PATRICK, by Brian Kneen, 1st January 2005

The First Cosnahan is stated by Bishop Wilson to have come to the Island about 1530 and to have had three sons, one of whom he settled on a piece of land bought in the treen of Balymore, and known as Ballaquiggin. (This piece of land is probably the farmstead now known as Ballacosnahan, Kirk Patrick.) Another son settled in Kirk Santan. The third son's home is not stated, and it is probable that this branch was extinct before the time of Bishop Wilson. Nothing is known of the personality of this original Quishnoga. The Three Families arising from the original Quishnoga will be dealt with seriatim, beginning with the branch whose homestead was not recorded by the Bishop. This son was presumably Lawrence.

Lawrence Quishnoga appears several times in ancient records; about 1539 he was a merchant in "Peele-towne." He had a son Lawrence who appears once as fighting with one Pat Quiggin, in the Book of Precedents, and again, some years later (1590), as buying a piece of ground, also from Pat Quiggin. But after this time there is no record of any of his progeny, and it is presumed that, as the family was not mentioned by Bishop Wilson, the line had died out.

"William" Quishnoga appears in Lib. Assed. in 1538 as the owner of Ballaquiggin, in the Treen of Balymore. For many generations there is a continuous line of Quishnogas, Quishnoghans and Cosnoghans holding Ballaquiggin. None of them appears in any other record than Lib. Assed. so far noted, but they appear to have been prosperous farmers, adding land from time to time to their holding. In 1580 two Cosnaghans signed a petition for a Church at Patrick, one Hugh, the other Thomas. As Ballaquiggin at this time was owned by William, son of the first William, these two land-owners would presumably be brothers of the William at Ballaquiggin. [?See: ArW 1674 Patrick of William Cosnahan of Ballaquiggin & Ballamoar, died 2 November 1674: wife Catharine Cosnahan alias Corris, heiress of Ballamore is alive (married before 1632), son William (eldest, has a contract), sons Hugh & Thomas, grandson William Cosnahan] The first of this line to become reasonably well-known has William, who was claimed as an ancestor by Colonel W. J. Anderson, Receiver-General. From this point, the family is fairly easily followed. This William died 1702, had two grandsons, William (b. 1703, d. 1755) the grandfather of Col. Anderson, and John, Captain of the parish of German. William (17) is buried at Patrick, and from his title of "Captain" it may be assumed that he was Captain of the Parish of Patrick. He had only one daughter, Ann (20), 1755-1824. William also appears as Coroner for Glenfaba. His daughter Ann became a well-known character; she married Dr. Thomas, a surgeon retired from the Royal Navy, who settled down at Ballacosnahan, while practising in Peel. They had no surviving son, but a large family of daughters, several of them remembered by Peel folk. Sage Ann Thomas married Captain John Gelling of Castletown and became the mother of John Caesar Gelling, M.H.K. Maria and Sophia married brother officers. Maria married Capt. Ronald Macdonald, a direct descendant of the only survivor of the massacre of Glencoe. Sophia married Captain Anderson, and their son was Colonel Anderson, the Receiver General. Young Ronald Macdonald joined the army, made a great name for himself in the Crimean War, and was very seriously wounded; on recovering he was made Governor of Edinburgh Castle. Mrs. Thomas left the estate of Ballacosnahan to her daughter Margaret, who left it to young Ronald MacDonald, who sold it to his cousin Col. Anderson, and he left it to his godson and nephew Colonel W. A. W. Crellin, M.C., brother of Captain John Frissel Crellin the present owner of Ballacurry, Andreas, and M.L.C. Colonel Crellin was killed in the 1914-18 war, and the estate went to his brother, Arthur Murray Crellin, the present owner. The Cosnahan male line ended with this grandfather of Colonel Anderson, so far as the senior branch was concerned. . . .

Old Manx Families 1889, by Arthur William Moore: The Curghey's or Curphey's, of Ballakillingan: [Appeared in Manx Note Book vol ii #7, p 121-4, 1886]: In the old parish church of Lezayre, there were tombstones recording the deaths of five Curghey's of Ballakillingan: John (1st), in 1559, John (2nd), in 1609; John (3rd), in 1652, Captain Ewan (1st), in 1695, and Captain Ewan (2nd), in 1697. Of John (1st), we know nothing. John (2nd) was Deemster. We find his name in 1601, written Courghey, attached to an 'agreement between the Deputy Governor, Council and Officers, Deemsters, Keys and others, as to payment of customs in money instead of kind.' John (3rd) is entered for Ballakillingan in 1613. At this period the connection between the Curghey's and their neighbours, the Christians of Milntown, commenced. John Curghey's 2nd wife was Mabel Christian, eldest daughter of Deemster Ewan Christian, and Ewan Curghey, his son by his first wife, married Margaret (born 1617) Mabel's youngest sister. John Curghey was a Member of the House of Keys and Captain of the Parish of Lezayre. In 1662, Hugh Moore, in his deposition as to the events in 1651, spoke of him as 'old John Curgheic.' Ewan (1st), also a Member of the House of Keys, and Captain of the Parish, was one of the deputation who proceeded on board Colonel Duckenfield's vessel in Ramsey Bay in October 1651, to negotiate for the surrender of the Island. On the 29th of December 1662, he was one of the seven removed from the House of Keys by order of Charles, Earl of Derby, before they proceeded to pass sentence upon Iliam Dhoan, and shortly afterwards his property was confiscated on account of his proceedings in 1651, but, by order in Council of the 5th of August, 1663, it was restored. [NOTE, that Ewan died in 1695, & wife Margaret in 1652 before the property was restored.] Ewan and Margaret Christian had issue: Ewan (died 1697), John (born 1657, died 1733, buried at Braddan), Matthias (born 1669, died 1754, buried at Bride). John was Vicar of Braddan, and Vicar General. In 1722, he was imprisoned in Castle Rushen with Bishop Wilson and Dr. Walker. By his wife, Hester (died 1704, buried at Lezayre), he had issue Elizabeth (1689), Annie (1691), John (1694), Matthias (born 1699, died 1771), Robert (born 1700), James (born 1702). Matthias is the only one of these of whom we have any record. We will first give an account of his uncle, Matthias, who had been Vicar of Lezayre, Patrick, German and Marown, respectively, and was finally, in 1729, appointed Rector of Bride, where he died, aged 85, in 1754. In 1749, Bishop Wilson ordered that 'whereas the Rev. Mr. Matthias Curghey, Rector of Kirk Bride, by reason of his great age and defect of his sight is rendered incapable of performing the whole service of the church in person, and not being able at present to procure one in Holy orders to assist him, we have thought fit and do accordingly appoint the Parish Clerk and Schoolmaster of the said parish, William Kewin, a person recommended to us of a sober life and conversation, to assist the said Rector in reading the first service of the Church, morning and evening, on Sundays and Holydays.' (MS of Bishop Wilson in possession of Rev. S.N. Harrison) On an upright stone, formerly in the Chancel of Bride Old Church, is recorded the death of his wife Dorothea, 'buried April 20th, 1749, aged 79,' as well as his own. Matthias, the younger, was Vicar of Lezayre and afterwards Rector of Ballaugh and Vicar General. He assisted in translating the Liturgy into Manx, and in revising the Pentateuch. He also transcribed the Epistles, and in connection with the Rev. James Wilks, the Gospels and Acts. Archdeacon Mylrea, writing to the Rev. Philip Moore on the 7th of February, 1771, remarks, 'Mr. Curghey is indeed a public loss to Mona; and a particular loss to you in your arduous undertaking . . . He was certainly a man of great candour and a good Christian.' (Letters in AW Moore's possession) . . . His tombstone in Ballaugh Churchyard declares him to have been 'an humble, meek, pacific man, sound divine, learned and exemplary.' His wife, Catherine, died a few months after him, and was buried at Lezayre.

See: IOM FHS journal, February 2004, per Ruth O'Keefe, The Christian of Beemaughag family: "Issue of Edward Christian and Ann Finch 1669:

Archdeacon Wills 1694 through 1699

- 1]. John Christian mar Alice Norris 1686 at Malew, and had two children, Edward b.1687 and Ann b.1691. John Christian d.1692.
- 2]. Daniel Christian d.1713. He married Dorothy Leece. She d.s.p. 1709. Daniel mar 2ndly Alice Norris, widow of his brother John. The child Edward mentioned in Daniel's will was not his son, but his step-son and nephew. Alice Norris was the daur of John Norris, Castletown, and his wife Salisbury. (See p.106 in my book where Daniel makes a claim for 5 pounds in 1699.) I found the following in the same film as Dorothy's will: "consideration concluded and agreed betwixt John Norris felt-maker C'town & Salisbury his wife in ye behalf of daur Ealice Norris on ye one pt & Dan Xtian of B'haig in Par Onchan & Dorriddy his wife in behalf of their brother John Christian on ye other pt. It is considered . . . that sd Jo Xtian & sd Eales Norris be joined within 1 mth next in holy matrimony. John Norris & Salisbury give portion gds today 5pounds, ½ 12 mths next & ½ at latter date. And Danl & Dorriddy give to well beloved brother & sd wife . . . tenement & bequeath all their gds to bro John . . . Nov 6 1709. Upon consideration of sum of 4pounds to be pd by Edward Xtian, exectr to . . . Dorothy Christian als Leece, upon his stepfather Dan Xtian & his sister Ann Xtian, sd Dan Xtian & Ann do hereby acquit & discharge themselves to all right. Alice, wife to above Dan is satisfied with above agreement [unable to read any further]. Alice Xtian als Norris (her mark)."
- 3]. Thomas Christian (abroad 1669) - could be 'Thomas the Immigrant'.
- 4]. Jony Christian mar Wm. Kermott of Middle.
- 5]. Isabel Christian mar Cowle. [?md 1st Henry Kewley (d. abt 1650) & 2nd Philip Cowle, & her only son Henry Kewley left for England in 1669 (?with his uncle Thomas Christian) and was never heard from again, his 1669 Deed of Gift proved as a will in 1695 --JMO, 2015]
- 6]. Alice Christian mar David Murrey d.1702. (I believe it was he who mar 1stly Katherine Moore, daur of Sir James & Mary Bancks, Baldromma, Lonan, shown wrongly on chart in my book with her sister Jane who mar Robt Stevenson, Lhergydhoo. There is a Jane Moore in the previous generation daur of Philip Moore & Cath Gill. That Jane mar John Caesar of Ballahick, and was accused of witchcraft in 1659 - see p.149 with her bro Philip Moore of the Hills. Cath Gill who mar Philip Moore was daur of Dan Gill, Curate of Andreas, & his wife Isabel; when Dan died she mar 2ndly Sir Wm Norris, VicGen K.Lonan in 1605. After reading the will of Jeffrey Gallow, Merchant of Castletown (1610) which appeared p.64-70 IOM FHS Journal May 2000, I believe Isabel was his sister. "Pledges were Sir William Norris and his wife together with Philip Moore for John Galloway, and James Bankes and Ursula Galloway for William Galloway."

Summary: husband Thomas Knickle, son Edward, son John Knickle, witnesses & pledges: Henry Radcliffe & John Quark / Quork / Coark (both Quork and Coark are used)

NOTE: The Malew defuncts dated 3 June 1696, lists her as 'Jane Knekle als Kewin', not as Jane Kneale als Kewin as in the old Typed Index. As written in the will, the surname could be read 'Knaile' or Knacle'. Since the defuncts lists Jane as 'Jane Knekle als Kewin', I have used the second interpretation of the surname, that is 'Knacle'.

See: IOM FHS Journal November 2006: A Family Dispute, by R.H. Leece: 1661 land dispute (Close Buoy / Ballaboie in Patrick) between John Leece & son versus sister Jane Leece & her deceased husband Thomas Shimmin (died December 1658); Jane [died February 1661/2, ArW 1661A #021 Patrick] & her son Thomas Shimmin (unmarried) made an agreement [on March 1659/60] with dau Catharine & her soon-to-be husband William Cannell regarding the land (which was illegal due to bargain between John & son with Jane & husband); Jane's will left the farm to son Thomas, which Catharine & husband William contested because of previous Contract Bargain [See ArW 1661A #020 Patrick, Contract Bargain], and then John Leece started proceedings for the land to return to him, per original Contract between John & sister Jane; by 1665, John had Ballaboie & Catharine (died January 1696/7) & husband William Cannell (died 1669) were living in Braddan & buried there. Also, Dorothy Leece (sister of John Leece & Jane Shimmin als Leece) received a dowry of the Great Close when she married Henry Halsall (died 1653, Episcopal Will Braddan), to return to the Leece family / heirs if she had no children (she did not) but her will left it to Richard Halsall & Thomas Kilbourne; brother John Leece successfully sue for its return to him

name of himself and his son, quests against Jane Leece and the executors of Thomas Shymin for a parcel of land called Close Buoy of the whole rent of twenty-two pence and for deteyninge a Contract bargain damagdes twenty shillings who appears by William Cannell and who says that the plaintiff ----[?] (Verdict) Nothing. Because he did not pursue the action” This obscurely worded text relates to Court proceedings heard in Kirk Patrick on the 2nd (or 22nd) of October 1663 and recorded in Liber Episcopi. The Clerk to the Court commenced the text in Latin, changed to English and concluded in Latin. It would appear that there was a Contract Bargain between John and his sister Jane, where-by she had been given tenure of Close Buoy (now Ballaboobie – Kirk Patrick) for the duration of her life. A similar situation had existed in relation to Jane’s eldest sister, Dorothy. Her dowry, known as the “Greate Close” would revert to the Leece family if Dorothy died childless. Her husband, Henry Halsall had died in 1653. There were no children and Dorothy was approaching the age of sixty years. John Leece successfully recovered title to the land which had passed into the possession of Richard Halsall and Thomas Kilbourne. (Liber Episcopi; 1654 & 55). Jane had married Thomas Shymin, circa 1635. There were two children, Thomas and Katherin. Jane’s husband died on the 20th of Decembr 1658 and Jane, then in her mid-fifties offered a Deed of Settlement to her son Thomas. He would obtain the rights and usages of the farm in return for providing his mother with food, clothing and shelter for the remainder of her life. Thomas, being unmarried, was unwilling to accept the offer. On the 20th of March 1659 a Contract Bargain was made between Jane, Thomas, Katherin and Katherin’s intended husband, William Cannell. Katherin and her husband would manage the farm for a period of sixteen years and look after her mother. At the end of the period (the mother having succumbed to old age?) the tenancy would pass to Thomas. Jane died in 1661. She made her will, ignoring the provisions of the Contract Bargain made between herself and her brother John and bequeathed the farm and its flax harvest to her son Thomas. Katherin and her husband contested the will, citing the 1659 Contract Bargain. Their petition was heard in June 1662. The earlier Contract Bargain between Jane and John Leece, was not brought to the notice of the Court. The will was declared void and they were awarded possession. John Leece in his role as head of the family, instituted proceedings to recover the farm which was situated in the Bishop’s Barony in Kirk Patrick. He also entered a claim for twenty shillings damages for the detaining of the Contract Bargain between himself and his deceased sister. That is for the loss of his income from the farm, because of its retention of his niece and her husband. The matter was brought before an Episcopal Court in October 1663. William Cannell represented himself and his wife Katherin. He informed the Court that John Leece ----- The final word of the sentence is written in scrawled Latin and it has defied translation. The verdict “Nothing. Because he [John Leece] did not pursue his action” is open to speculation. Possibly some Out of Court agreement had been reached between John and his niece. She and her husband were living in Kirk Braddan in 1665. Their second daughter Averike was baptized on the 20th of August. Katherin’s husband died in September 1669 and Katherin died in January 1697. They were buried in Braddan. Their youngest daughter, Coonee, married Joe [sic, Jo, or John] Creer on the 12th May 1706 in Kirk Braddan. The said Margt Christian acknowledgeth that she heard that the sd Dan: Tear had boasted such or the like cleared and purged themselves from haveing any Carnall knowledge of each other; which accordinly thay have done in the face of the Court; upon further enquiry into the matter, it appears that the said Margt Xtian has very uncharitably added to the Report, for which she has given no Authour; Therefore it is ordered that the sd

1688 Liber Vastarum, Braddan: Thomas Stole / Stowell had a cottage in Villa Douglas for 3d rent, and in 1688, Christopher Fitzsimon's was entered for 2d of it by an agreement between him and his brother in law John Whipps (i.e. Hendricks) who was a grandson of Thomas Stowell; Thomas Oates was entered for 1d of it, having purchased it from Thomas Stowell, with Christopher Fitzsimons having a right to it reserved. At a Chancery Court 7 July 1709, James Savage, 2nd husband of Ellinior [Hendricks] who had first married Christopher Fitzsimons, complained that his brother in law John Hendricks of Douglas 'threatened to give him disturbance about the part of this 3d rent that formerly belonged to him under pretence that his name was not John Whipps as mentioned [in 1688] and that he did not give up his right to the premises to Christopher Fitzsimons'. James Savage, being a stranger / foreigner, requested a court hearing and the conclusion was that John Hendricks' claims were groundless, and that Hendricks had given up his right to Christopher Fitzsimons 'in consideration of his instruction in the hands of a hatter' and James Savage offered to bring in testimony that John Hendricks' father went by the name of Whipps.

German parish register: Bahy Quark buried 16 February 1698/9 will of father: ArW 1670A #61 German will of Thomas Mylchreest, died 20 December 1670: wife is not mentioned, dau Elizabeth / Bessy, dau Isabel, dau Bahie, brother [Randle], also: Thomas Quirk, John Quirk, Thomas Quirk junior, witnesses: John Woods clerk & John Crellin, pledges: Thomas Quirk & Thomas Quirk junior will of uncle: ArW1680A #24 will of Randle Mylchreest, died 21 December 1680, has a house & croft in Bride: married twice [1st wife Catharine Kneale died 1655, ArW 1655A #07 Bride, & 2nd Christian Joughin died March 1668/9, ArW 1668A #92 Bride] but no children, nieces: Elizabeth / Bessy Mylchreest, Isabel Mylchreest, Bahie Mylchreest, witnesses: John Caine & Patrick Mylevorrey, pledges: Thomas Quirk & John Caine

NOTE, based on the wills of Bahie's father (died 1670) & uncle (died 1680), where Thomas Quirk, Thomas Quirk junior, & John Quirk are mentioned, I conclude that her husband is probably either Thomas or John. Since Thomas Quirk was left the work of a horse until May, indicating he had a farm needing working, I conclude further that Thomas is more likely her husband. This needs proving.

Archdeacon Wills, undated Petition of William Christian of KK Michael, whose wife Margaret Garrett was left a parcel of land by her aunt Margaret Clark alias Cowley, who left her husband Robert Clark and died in Ireland, Ann Christian & Mrs Margaret Christian (who had been in England) were also mentioned:

NOTE: See the below will summaries. It appears that the husband of Margaret Clark alias Cowley, Robert Clark, was persona non grata with her family, for he was never mentioned in their wills, which supports her going to Ireland to maybe get away from him, and dying there. The will she left does not mention any of her family, only her husband and children, which suspiciously suggests the husband's control over the will. The husband Robert contended that, because his wife Margaret 'deserted' him by going to Ireland, she forfeited her wife's part to the accumulated goods, but there was no such Manx law or custom, and William sued for the land Robert's wife Margaret Cowley had left William's wife Margaret Garrett.

Summary: William married Margaret Garrett, daughter of Philip Garrett & Bessy Cowley, & Bessy was the sister of Margaret Cowley who married Robert Clark. I do not know where Ann Christian & Mrs Margaret Christian fit in.
